

Trip...

Upon arriving in St. Paul, head downtown to the Science Museum of Minnesota. Upon finding the museum, enter and bear right. Buy a ticket at the counter. You will get a little badge to wear as proof of having purchased the ticket. It's sort of like the little wrist-badge you get upon entering a hospital for major surgery.

Next, you need to enter the Omnitheatre, brainchild of the 3M Corporation. You would be surprised at what the people who bring you Scotch tape can do to your spatial senses.

The entrance to the theatre is a winding path. Along the way you will be fighting world's most intense air conditioning system. A tuna-salad sandwich would keep forever in the cold temperature.

You will probably get a chance to look at the projector, which is the heart of the theatre. It resembles a gigantic computer.

The film is even more amazing. It resembles a roll of Brawny paper towels. This film makes two-inch video tape look like a spool of thread. Finally, however, you will enter the theatre.

The theatre, with no film running, is sort of a psychologist's dream. You enter and immediately begin to lose your equilibrium. All the aisles are an inclined plane and are carpeted in purple, along with the seats and everything but the ceiling, which is a pale cream color.

The theatre resembles a cereal bowl because it is gently curved from side to side. If you took a grapefruit, cut it in half and placed it on an inclined 50 degree plane, you would have the Omnitheatre.

The real fun begins when you think you have everything figured out (which way is up and such), 3M pulls the rug out from beneath you. If you are prone to car sickness and carry a supply of Dramamine with you on short flights, the Omnitheatre might not be for you.

Through some sort of projection system, the image on the curved screen starts at your feet and curves up over your head. You would need eyes in the back of your head to see the whole thing. Likewise for the image at your sides. When looking straight ahead you can see nothing but the motion picture.

This would all be very easy to handle if the film was a documentary on the germination of seeds. But no, 3M makes it interesting. You get to ride in a jet fighter racing across the face of the earth at two times the speed of sound.

If you aren't up to that, you might choose something a little more milder, like the snow mobile or cable car ride. All are guaranteed to make your stomach do Olympic-class gymnastics. If you remembered to bring your air sickness bag, you get a gold star for the day.

At $3 the 3M Omnitheatre is the cheapest out-of-this-world trip that any traveler will ever take.
