

Letters to the editor

Wednesday evening a marquee in front of the Nebraska East Union was vandalized. Someone took every letter off the marquee.

The purpose of this marquee is to advertise our events to the students here at UNL. Do you, the students, realize that your student fees are used to rent this marquee?

To those who stole these letters, you have taken some student fee money from the students. You have also taken away a means of letting all students become aware of the programs to take place for which student fees are spent.

Name remains

Thanks for the supportive comments about our band, the Star City Players. Since yours is the second publication to misspell my name I'd like to set the record straight. My last name is still Krutz. I have no intention of changing it to Drutz no matter how many renamers and/or type-setters attempt otherwise. (relax mom).

Also a special thanks to those organizers of Eastfest who greeted us and treated us so warmly. The crowd was excellent and the room superb. It was a pleasure to be a part of Eastfest.

Favorite columnist

I enjoy Michael Zangari's column because of its wit and openness to outside views. The "San Francisco Poll" and "Guest Review" have made Zangari one of my favorite columnists. Of course, my opinion is biased, since this review will be the second appearance of my words outside the personals. (I mentioned the computer room as a favorite hangout, stadium, too.) One possible improvement would be more regular appearance of the column.

United Way...

One of their member feminist organizations performed abortions, gave gynecological care and serviced a crisis line for teenagers. Women's Way was denied membership, but because of social pressure, United Way made certain reforms. It developed a donors-option plan allowing 900 non-membership health and social service organizations in the area to be designated to receive funds.

Marshall said United Way's final figures aren't in but that because of the publicity from the incident, her organization has received about $10,000.

Barbara Kerr, UNL assistant professor in educational psychology, said that United Way has consistently turned down organizations she has worked with in Missouri and Ohio because of an apparent fear of controversy.

The three organizations offered either birth control information and education, drug-counseling or gay counseling and medical help. The agencies' structures were cooperative rather than hierarchical, which Kerr said is a difficult format for United Way to accept.

"The United Way is frightened by grass-roots organizations begun by people rather than those begun by boards of directors."

The Planned Parenthood organization has been denied funding in some cities for offering birth control information or abortion services. The Lincoln office never has requested membership from United Way because of what one worker called "the strings that can be attached."

United Way's national board of directors has board members from IBM, Xerox, Exxon and ATT. Their "fear" of controversy also could serve as subterfuge for control, power incestuously maintained by all-white, affluent males.

There are 2,300 local chapters, including 37,000 member agencies. People who donate through the chapters feel they are covering a broad range in the best way. The United Way monopoly is the only workplace charity and payroll-deduction charity in most areas, but perhaps it's wise to see where the money goes and who it really works for.
