Few sign up at late registration

By Abby Maahs

A sparse but steady stream of men born in 1962 filed into Lincoln post offices Friday and Saturday for the last day of second-round draft registration.

Eric Johnson, a volunteer for Nebraskans for Peace and a member of the UNL Students' Resistance Organization said he had spoken to only two prospective registrants.

"One registered under protest, and the other went home to think it over," he said.

Everett Strough, post office representative for the Selective Service, said the volunteers for Nebraskans for Peace did not give the post office any problems and were allowed to stand in the lobbies to distribute leaflets.

"All we do is provide the registration forms and answer questions about filling them in. The men are required to fill in their social security numbers, and if we notice it's missing, we point it out. But if they refuse we don't argue. That's between them and the Selective Service."

Although the Selective Service does not allow the post office to release information on the numbers of men registering or registering under protest, Strough did say that few had registered under protest.

Young men opposed to registration but going through the process were given stickers by protest volunteers to attach to their forms. The stickers said they were registering under protest.

Johnson said the men would not be penalized for registering under protest, but that they could face up to five years in a federal prison and up to a $10,000 fine for refusing to register.

Those who turn 18 in 1981 will be required to register within 30 days of their birthday.

Another volunteer with Nebraskans for Peace, Jim Anderson, says the group's main objection to registration is that in this country, registration has almost always been followed by a draft for war.

"And Americans need to wake up to the fact that the only way our species can continue to exist is to co-exist peacefully. I feel since I am aware of the threat of (nuclear) war, it's my duty to inform those won aren't."

Not all 18-year-olds were influenced by this opinion. Ernie Spidell, 18, from Cortland, said he registered under protest, opposing the draft but not necessarily war.

"If I have to go, sure I'll do it. Better to go out and fight than to wait until the bombs drop here. Still, it had better be for a damn good reason."
