

Regents approve Publications Board guidelines

By D. Eric Kircher

The NU Board of Regents Saturday voted to accept guidelines, proposed by UNL School of Journalism Dean Neale Copple, for selecting members of the UNL Publications Board. Copple headed the committee which wrote the guidelines. The regents voted 7-1 to accept the guidelines after minor changes in the wording. Regent Robert Simmons of Scottsbluff voted against acceptance.

The guidelines provide that:
 -The chancellor select Publications Board members from a Faculty or Student Senate list of candidates. The list must have at least two names for every open position.
 -The chancellor appoint working journalists to professional openings.
 -Student and faculty candidates must declare possible conflicts of interest.

 -Elected or appointed student or faculty officers are excluded from the Publications Board for one year.

Candidates who lose an election are excluded from the Publications Board for four months.

The regents rejected UNL Student Renee Wessels' motion that the senate list names in order of preference and the chancellor consider the senate's preference. Wessels also moved to drop the four month waiting period for unsuccessful candidates, but the regents said the wait would prevent losers from using the Publications Board to retaliate.

The Board also elected its 1981 officers, discussed football ticket policy, and a UNO faculty union's contract offer.

The university still will sell student tickets for $35 next fall after the regents considered and rejected changes in student and faculty ticket policies.

Chancellor finalists expected

Within a few weeks, NU President Ronald Roskens will be presented with a list of between five and seven names from which he will choose a permanent chancellor, a member of the UNL Chancellor Search Committee said.

Joe Nigro, a student member of the committee, said last week that he was sure a new chancellor would be chosen by the end of the semester.

Nigro said the search committee soon will decide by "more than a majority vote" on the finalists for the position.

Nigro refused to reveal the names of any of the remaining candidates because, "if some of the names got out, it might force certain candidates to pull out" because too much pressure would be put on them in their current jobs.

"All three students on the committee (Nigro, Sue Ellis and Jim Davidson), have a lot of experience in student government and I think we've been fairly effective so far in speaking out," Nigro said.

Nigro said he is confident that the finalists selected will be people that UNL students would be satisfied with as possible chancellors.

The Lincoln Journal reported Sunday that Robert L. Bovey, a candidate for chancellor and UNL graduate who is an aide to outgoing Defense Secretary Harold Brown, did not survive an early cut among the more than 100 original candidates. The Journal attributed this to search committee sources, and also reported that Interim Chancellor Robert Rufford still is on the list of candidates.
