

Fees approved for ASUN development director

By Lori McGinnis

ASUN's budget request for a new employee to help alleviate three major problems within the organization has been accepted by the Committee for Fees Allocation.

The director of development position was recommended for allocation of $9,858—the same figure ASUN requested—to help solve continuity, record-keeping and communication problems ASUN president Renee Wessels said the organization is facing.

ASUN's total request of $77,095 was tentatively reduced to $65,868 by CFA.

Wessels said she is "very excited" with the committee's support of the new position and CFA's recommendation of $20,750 for ASUN's contribution to the State Student Association.

Wessels said CFA "truly made a judgment in the best interest of the students" in recommending money for the position.

"Over all, I think it's a pretty fair tentative allocation, with a few exceptions," she said.

Wessels' request for an $880 increase for the ASUN president's salary was denied. CFA recommended $1,280 for the salary, the same as this year's salary.

Dan Renn, ASUN subcommittee chairman for CFA, said the committee feels it is not economically feasible to grant the increase.

Wessels said she understands CFA's difficulty in recommending fee money allocations, but she is disappointed with CFA's judgment of the president's salary.

CFA recommended $400 for conference registration fees, up from $200 in the 1980-81 budget, but less than ASUN's 1981-82 request for $1,000.

Renn said CFA feels $400 would be a sufficient amount for ASUN members to attend conferences but Wessels disagreed.

She said if more ASUN senators go to the conferences, ASUN can better serve the students.

Wessels said CFA's failure to recommend $5,708 for a full-time secretary was her greatest concern. A secretary is needed to take care of the "volumes of work" in the office and to create a favorable first impression when someone comes into the office, she said.

CFA tentatively recommended $1,100 for two work-study receptionists instead.

Renn said the committee feels it would be too expensive to hire a full-time secretary along with the director of development position.

The committee also said it is too expensive to add a third telephone line in the ASUN office, but did agree one was needed.

Because CFA did not recommend money for a third line, Wessels said she may consider looking into obtaining donations from private law firms for the phone line.

Wessels said she hasn't decided if she will appeal CFA's decisions. She said she may appeal the president's salary, conference fees and full-time secretary recommendations.

Rally . . .

To avoid a confrontation similar to last year's, the pro-choice supporters kept to a corner in the back of the rally.

With their own signs, such as "No forced motherhood," and one that depicted a coat hanger with a red cross over it, the group shouted remarks toward the platform.

Labeled said, at the end of her speech, "God bless everyone here today, even those in the back corner. Thank God their mothers allowed them to be with us here today."

Brennon singled out the group at the beginning of his statement by saying, "one of the basic ground rules of totalitarianism is to shut off the speaker so the truth cannot be heard."

Brennon added, "We are here to speak against the destruction of our nations' most valuable resource, human life. We must be able to recognize the right to choose as a hideous slogan of the right to destroy another human being."

Brennon went on to refer to contemporary doctors as medical executioners and it was a defiance of ecology and humanity.

"Abortion must not be accepted in a society that calls itself civilized," he said. "It must be regulated back to barbarianism from which it came."

Both sides seemed satisfied with the day's results, and the significance of their participation.

"I thought it was great. It made me stop and think," said pro-lifer supporter Mary Nave. "This is something that needs to be supported daily."

"We have a right to express our opinions as they do," said Toni Van Horn of the right to choose group. "I hope men realize they have just as much responsibility in this as women do, but women must make the final decision."

Scholarship books

If you've always wanted to know everything about scholarships at UNL but were afraid to ask, you're in luck.

Robin Younger, chairperson of the Scholarship Booklet Committee, said the booklets listing all forms of scholarships at UNL will be distributed Tuesday.

Younger said 600 booklets have been printed listing more than 800 kinds of scholarships.

Younger said the booklet's purpose is to inform students that scholarships are available to many students, not just straight-A students.

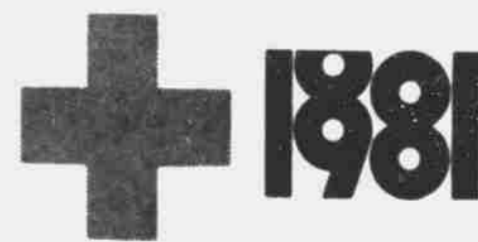

She said the booklets will be distributed to college deans, residence hall student assistants, and Greek houses.

The Financial Aids Office and libraries also will have copies available for students.

The NU Foundation and the Student Alumni Association financed the booklet.

Younger said the book lists the criteria that must be met to earn the scholarships, but does not list their dollar amounts.
