

Rita...

It was getting late, but Mrs. Jenrette said she was not tired. She suggested that we go to a fancy nightclub, but I said that I would rather go to D.B. Kaplan's delicatessen instead.

So we went out to Mrs. Jenrette's waiting white limousine, which had been provided by Playboy. The chauffeur drove us to D.B. Kaplan's.

Mrs. Jenrette and I walked past the display case filled with cheesecake and streudel and went to the wooden bar in the back. She kept her fur coat wrapped around her shoulders and we sat on stools.

Rick Helland, the bartender at D.B. Kaplan's, put a napkin in front of Mrs. Jenrette and said, "Will you marry me?"

"Do you have diet Dr. Pepper?" Mrs. Jenrette said. We chatted for a while, but it was apparent that Mrs. Jenrette was becoming weary.

"Sometimes I wish I was back in Austin, wearing my blue jeans and riding a motorcycle," she said.

On the way out of the delicatessen, Mrs. Jenrette stopped to accept a red paper napkin that was being offered to her by Mr. Helland. He asked her to autograph it.

She took a pen and wrote, "To Rick Love you more than Dr. Pepper, Rita Jenrette." Then she wrote something I could not see.

I let her walk ahead of me, then she returned to the bar. I asked Mr. Helland if I could see the napkin.

He handed it to me. On the bottom of it, Mrs. Jenrette had written her home address in New York.

I caught up with Mrs. Jenrette, and we returned to her white limousine. She offered me a ride home. I said I'd walk instead. And I did.
