

UNL to evaluate vehicle policy

By Alice Hrnicek

UNL administrators and the ASUN Campus Life Committee decided Thursday to look into the Automobile Rental Pool's policy on renting university vehicles to student organizations. A group recently was denied access to a van for a New Orleans trip.

The UNL chapter of the National Agri-Marketing Association asked the CAP office for permission to rent a van starting Thursday for their trip, said Ennio Quevedo, activities director for Campus Activities and Programs.

After being told the rental would be approved once the group had enough money, Quevedo said, the members had a fund drive to raise the money.

But after the fund drive, they were told that student groups could not rent vehicles because the auto pool was questioning a legislative amendment that might increase the liability of the university.

Members of the group were enroute to New Orleans and unable to comment.

University policy since 1976 does not allow students to rent vehicles unless they are university employees and the use is work-related, Quevedo said.

However, student groups have been renting vehicles through the auspice of the Nebraska Unions, he added.

Roy Loudon, administrator of personnel and risk management, said he is formulating a policy to address the issue. The present policy may change because of the amendment, he said, but he did not know how soon he would finish it.

The state's guest statute law previously required guest riders to prove gross negligence or intoxication on the part of the driver to recover injury in case of accident.

With the passage this year of LB54, riders would have to prove only ordinary negligence instead of gross negligence, said Ron Sedlacek, legal counsel for Sen. John DeCamp of Neligh who introduced the amendment. The amendment also denies close relatives of a driver the right to recover damages, Sedlacek said.

The negligence change could increase the chances of liability by the university if it rents vehicles out to students, he said.

After meeting with UNL administrators and other ASUN members, Nancee Shannon, chairperson of the ASUN campus life committee, labeled the issue "very confusing."

"We can't pinpoint the problem. So much research has to be done," she said.

Richard Armstrong, vice chancellor for student affairs, said he knew too little about the policy to have a "substantial response."

"I am concerned that this condition (the question of liability) exists, and I want to look for it," Armstrong said.

Union Square slated to open
January 1982

If you are the sentimentalist type and want to savor the last few moments of a long-standing union food service, time is running out.

The Crib will close its doors May 7, and when they reopen in January, 1982, the entire scene will have changed along with the name (to Union Square).

"We don't have a time set for construction of the North Crib," said union director Daryl Swanson.

"We still need to complete the design, and put it out for our bidders. I hope it's possible the actual construction will begin by June," Swanson said.

The current Crib attracts about 1,500 to 2,000 customers a day, which isn't enough, Swanson said.

The remodeled area will change the service into a fast food center, which will "serve people quickly and move them on," Swanson said.

The closing of The Crib is the only new thing a student can expect to see about the Union next year. Until it reopens, a short lunch line will be set up in the South Crib, which shall remain untouched.

Also, to help with the overflow of students who are used to using the Crib for studying or conversation, the Harvest Rooms' hours will be altered to accommodate these people.

Swanson added that the time between the beginning plans for Union Square and the actual implementation of it has passed rather quickly.

"This is as fast as anything gets done around here," Swanson said.
