Book costs increase

The average textbook for the fall semester will be going up in price about $2, according to Jerry Mullinix, the textbook manager of the Nebraska Bookstore.

Mullinix said that prices usually rise about $1 per year, but the increase would be more this fall.

Larry Behrends, manager of the Union Bookstore for the past 10 years said that every year the books have increased in price, but in the past five years the rate of increase is has been higher. Behrends estimated the increase to be about 10 percent, but there are no accurate statistics since the fall textbooks haven't been shipped yet.

Prices should be the same at both bookstores since the publishers are the ones to set prices, Behrends said.

Textbooks aren't the only thing going up in price for students next fall, Behrends said. Art supplies, notebooks and materials are also increasing in price, although they aren't rising as fast as textbooks, Behrends said.

Nebraskans content with public schools

Nebraskans are more satisfied with their public schools than is the nation as a whole, according to the latest Nebraska Annual Social Indicators Survey, published by the Bureau of Sociological Research at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Lynn K. White, director of the bureau and an associate professor of sociology, reports the survey shows that 43 percent of Nebraskans think their local schools are very good, compared to 38 percent of the citizens in the rest of the nation thinking the same way.

White noted a "particularly strong" relationship between community satisfaction and satisfaction with the public schools.

Less than 20 percent of those dissatisfied with their community gave high ratings to the schools, while 54 percent of those very satisfied with their communities were also very satisfied with their local schools.
