

Cruise to Antarctica offered

By Cindy Saylor

Although a 34-day cruise through the land of ice and penguins may not be every traveler's idea of paradise, the Nebraska Alumni Association is offering a trip to Antarctica to 2,000 UNL alumni.

According to Jack Miller, executive vice president of the association, the excursion was not planned for those seeking a "Love Boat" excursion, but for adventurers who had already traveled the more common routes.

The passengers will make stops to observe the Emperor penguins and will visit McMurdo Station and Scott Base, two United States scientific stations.

The travelers also will see the Ross Ice Shelf, where the university is involved in an ice drilling project, and hear lectures by George Llano, head of the Polar Science Division of National Science.

The association has been sponsoring trips since 1962 as a service to alumni, offering relatively low rates due to group buying power, Miller said.

He said trips offered by the association have increased in popularity due to an increase from three to eight in the number offered, resulting in better selection.

Since the cost of promotion and invitations prevents contacting more than 2,000 alumni, Miller said alumni are selected to receive invitations based on age and past interest in travel.

In the month since the expedition has been announced, Miller said one person has made definite reservations, and another has tentative plans for joining the cruise. The maximum number of passengers is 20, but the ship will set out regardless of whether capacity is reached.

Excursions to Egypt and China have been offered in the past.
