

Recycling centers decrease aluminum can payments

Aluminum can prices recently dropped 4 cents a pound at two recycling centers in the Lincoln area.

Russell Miller, manager of Nebraska Recycling, said the company dropped the price it pays for cans because the Aluminum Company of America dropped the price it pays centers by 7 cents during the last three months.

Miller said ALCOA reported that the price probably would not go up for six months.

George Easley, president of Siti Sales, a local beer distributor, said his company was also prompted to lower prices because of the ALCOA reduction. Easley also said the greater number of cans brought in during the summer might cause further reductions.

Representatives of Safeway and D&D Distributor (of Anheuser-Busch products) said they will not reduce the price they now pay.

Dick Knight, Safeway public relations manager, said Safeway will keep the price at one cent a can or about 24 cents a pound.

Knight said Safeway entered the recycling business at the strong recommendation of Anheuser-Busch Brewery, Russell said. The price it will pay for the cans will be determined by the brewery.

Aluminum cans can be profitable for students to collect, because the aluminum goes for 20 to 24 cents a pound. Here Larry Reznicek feeds cans into a recycling bin.
