KRNU provides experience for more than 100 students

KRNU radio, 90.3 on the FM dial, provides professional experience to broadcasting students in a variety of radio-related activities, said Larry Walklin, chairman of broadcasting in the School of Journalism and general manager of KRNU.

The activities involve all news and talk formats for the station, music formats featuring rock, classical and jazz and public affairs programming. Students also are involved with the technical side of broadcasting, Walklin said.

"They don't repair equipment, but they are expected to understand its operation," he said.

Students in four broadcasting courses are directly involved with KRNU, Walklin said. Introductory broadcasting production courses deal with the production and programming aspects of the station.

Two broadcast reporting classes handle the news operation of the station.

As part of their curriculum in broadcasting, 100 to 125 students participate in the operation of the radio station, Walklin said.

The station has been in operation since Feb. 23, 1980, and has won a variety of national and area awards, Walklin said. In competition with all types of radio stations, the student-operated station has won awards from the Major Armstrong Foundation, the Associated Press in Nebraska and the Northwest Broadcast News Association. It has also won an award from the Aksarben-sponsored competition for the Nebraska Broadcasters' Association in three of the last four years.

Walklin said most of Lincoln can receive KRNU, except for some pockets of the city that are affected by interference because of electrical circumstances and other radio stations.

Change deadline Friday

Students wishing to change to or from Pass/No Pass must do so before 4 p.m. Friday, according to Anthony Schkade, assistant director of registration and records.

Schkade said the deadline applies to full-semester courses. He said deadlines for changing mini-course registrations are posted in the Registration Office, Administration Building 103.

Schkade said exceptions to the deadline may be made by writing to the Faculty Senate Grading Committee and providing them with letters of support from student's adviser, instructor and the chairman of the department the course is being taught under.

Schkade said the grading committee grants exceptions only for extenuating circumstances.
