Jack Vogt, executive director of the Family Service Agency, said his agency, which deals with nutrition and children's programs, is still in limbo this fiscal year because he has not been notified of the specific cuts.

Normally, FSA knows what its budget will be by Oct. 1 and able to plan for the year, Vogt said.

However, he said a significant percentage of the funds FSA depends upon comes from the federal government.

Vogt says he doubts that the private sector will take up the slack left behind by the cuts.

"It's very unlikely that it will work," he said. "As a piece of evidence, take a look at the current United Way campaign.

As far as I know, they are not making their goal."

Judy Stewart, communication director for the United Way of Lincoln, said the United Way has collected over $2 million of a $2,176,452 goal. She said the final tally would not be available until all the pledges have been collected and audited.

As an alternative method of financing, Vogt said the FSA Board of Directors is looking into the possibility of developing an endowment fund and encouraging private contributions.

He said people would will money to FSA, which would then invest the money and use the interest for operating expenses.

"I think you're going to see a lot of agencies looking at this type of method now," Vogt said.

Service lists over 60 jobs

By Tim Schaffert

Students interested in part-time work should be aware of the job-locating service provided at UNL, said Valerie Fisher, assistant director of Scholarships and Financial Aids.

More than 60 jobs are listed outside Administration 113 where the service is located.

Students can make an appointment with the assistant director who will fill out an information sheet on a student's schedule and interests. Those who have filled out information sheets will usually be contacted by the office before new job openings are displayed outside the office, Fisher said.

Available jobs include clerical work, delivery jobs and child care. Most career-oriented jobs listed are in computer programming and accounting, she said.

Other jobs include manager positions — one at a local pet shop, the other running a paperback bookstore.

The job location service was initiated five years ago at UNL, Fisher said. The highest number of jobs ever listed by the service was in 1978, when there were 122 for a one month period, she said.

But the job market is becoming much tighter in Lincoln, she said. This year 142 jobs were listed for April, May, and June combined. Of the 142 jobs, 82, or about 60 percent were filled by UNL students, she said.

The job-locating service will send letters to 4,000 Lincoln employers this month encouraging them to participate in the program, she said. New companies in Lincoln which are potential part-time employers are contacted.

The service doesn't have to be a student's only source when looking for part-time work, Fisher said. Many Lincoln companies hire students part-time without ever running an advertisement with the service or the Lincoln papers, she said.

But the service does find jobs, and can be especially valuable to students who are not from Lincoln and are unfamiliar with the area, she said.

KRNU, the UNL radio station, announces job openings provided by the service three times daily, twice a week.

Ticket money stolen from sports center

UNL police reported the theft of $180 in ticket money from the Bob Devaney Sports Center Saturday.

The money was taken from a ticket booth about noon. The money came from ticket sales for the AAU Great Plains Wrestling Tournament the UNL wrestling team had participated in.
