Speaker: U.S. involvement in El Salvador dangerous

If the United States continues to send military aid to the government of El Salvador, it risks becoming involved in another war like the one in Vietnam, a representative from the Omaha Solidarity Committee for Central America said Thursday.

Jim Haster, who spent two months in El Salvador and Guatemala in 1980, spoke to about 25 people in the Nebraska Union. His talk and the movie El Salvador: Another Vietnam? were sponsored by UNL's Latin American Solidarity Committee and Progressive Student Union.

El Salvador is in the midst of a bloody civil war brought about by the extreme poverty of most Salvadorans, Haster said. The majority of the land and power in El Salvador is concentrated in the hands of a few families, he said.

The United States is supporting the ruling military/civilian junta in El Salvador by supplying its armies with military aid, advisers and troop training, Haster said.

According to leaflets distributed at the speech, 1,000 Salvadoran soldiers started training at Fort Bragg, N.C., Jan. 11. About 600 Salvadoran junior officers are scheduled to begin training at Fort Benning, Ga., today.

The United States is aiding the junta because of fears that El Salvador might become communist if the present government is overthrown, Haster said. But by aiding the junta, the United States is supporting a repressive government at the expense of the Salvadoran people, he said. This country's involvement in Vietnam started in the same way as involvement in El Salvador has started, with the sending of advisers and military aid, Haster said.

To prevent the Central American country from becoming the next Vietnam, the United States should end intervention in its political affairs, Haster said.

"If we can develop and build a very strong anti-war movement, we can stop another Vietnam war from developing," he said.

Judging team second in Denver competition

UNL varsity livestock judging team placed second in a field of 27 teams in an intercollegiate livestock judging contest in conjunction with the National Western Livestock Show in Denver, Colo.

The team, coached by Professor R.B. Warren, won the reserve championship with strong individual placings in all judging classes. A Colorado State University team took top honors.

Sharon Kriewald of North Loup was second high individual and teammate Jeffrey Miller of North Bend was fifth. Kriewald placed third in horse judging and Miller second in cattle.

The team placed first in horses, second in sheep, third in hogs and sixth in cattle judging enroute to its second-place finish.

Free tax assistance available to students

Free tax assistance will be offered on City Campus by Beta Alpha Si, the national honorary accounting fraternity.

According to Joe Vollbracht, a Beta Alpha Si member, the federal tax assistance program has been active on campus for the last three or four years.

About 25 student accounting majors volunteer to work with the Internal Revenue Service and extend the program to the campus.

"Anybody, not specifically students, is eligible to use the service," Vollbracht said. "However, if the form is really complicated, the person may be better off going to a professional."

The program offers assistance on the federal 1040 and 1040A (shorter version) tax forms, as well as the Nebraska state forms. The service can also answer questions and give referrals, Vollbracht said.

Assistance will be offered today through April 14, each Monday and Wednesday from 7 to 10 p.m. in Nebraska Union 225.
