Spring football game Saturday to include quarterback Mason

By Jeff Goodwin

Nebraska football Coach Tom Osborne got some good news at Wednesday's practice: It appears quarterback Nate Mason will be able to play in Saturday's Red-White game.

Mason has been bothered by injuries all spring, the latest being a bruise on his throwing arm.

"He (Mason) was out today but he didn't throw," Osborne said Wednesday. "We expect he'll be able to throw by Friday and he should be able to play on Saturday."

Mason's return was particularly good news considering that two quarterbacks, Turner Gill and Bruce Mathison, will definately miss the spring game and a third, Travis Turner is questionable.

Gill is still recovering from an injury he suffered last year while Mathison broke a bone in his hand during a scrimmage this spring.

Turner strained a neck muscle during a scrimmage last weekend.

The Huskers had originally scheduled a scrimmage for Wednesday but it was canceled.

Despite canceling the scrimmage, there was one injury to the Husker ranks Wednesday.

Starting left offensive tackle Randy Theiss injured his knee in a kickoff drill and is questionable for Saturday's game.

Osborne said he was generally pleased by the way spring practice has gone.

'We basically accomplished what we set out to do," Osborne said. "We had some problems with the weather but that's something that's out of our hands."

Osborne said he expects a close game

Saturday Also Wednesday, Husker tight end Mitch Krenk was voted by his teammates as lifter of the year.

Krenk, who weighed 190 pounds when he came to Nebraska as a freshman compared to his current weight of 230, has bench pressed 375 pounds, a record for a Nebraska tight end.

Kickoff for Saturday's Red-White game is 1:30 p.m. in Memorial Stadium.
