Crumley instigates several changes in UNL J-School

While Neale Copple, UNL School of Journalism dean, has taken over temporarily the position of vice chancellor for academic affairs, Wilma Crumley has replaced him as dean of the school.

Temporarily leaving her post as associate dean for graduate studies at the Journalism School, Crumley has made several changes in the school's program.

Here's a list of some of those changes:

- Establishment of the Martha H. Hitchcock & Graduate Chair in Journalism.
- Established the Fred Seaton Journalism Chair.

- Renewed publication of a magazine by magazine writing and editing classes, with opportunity for graduate students, faculty and professional mass media people to publish articles.

- Renewed publication of a magazine by depth reporting class members focusing on a single topic.

- Beginning publication of an advertising Idea Book by advertising students, with opportunity for graduate, undergraduate, faculty and professional media people to publish articles on the business side of journalism.

- Further experimentation by the radio station, KRNU.

- A new community journalism course taught by Al Pagel of the Omaha World-Herald Magazine of the Midlands in cooperation with the Gannett Newspaper Co.

- Organizing of School of Journalism graduates, with the first meeting scheduled for Oct. 23 during the Missouri-Nebraska football game.

- A look at the accomplishments of the Journalism School alumnae during the Accomplishments of Women luncheon sponsored by the Commission on the Status of Women scheduled for Oct. 28.

DN selects syndicated columnists

Each semester the Daily Nebraskan buys a new batch of syndicated columnists for the editorial pages.

This semester we have one returning syndicated columnist and three newcomers. Normally, they will each be published one time a week with the fifth day rotated among the writers.

What follows in an introduction - or in the case of returning columnist Ellen Goodman, a reintroduction - to each syndicated columnist. The information and picture were provided by the columnists' respective companies.

Ross Mackenzie is the lone conservative among this semester's syndicated columnists.

His syndicate company, Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc., says he is "an unstuffer of shirts, a deflater of windbags and an exposé of idiocy public and private."

He writes on topics ranging from academics to Washington politics. His degrees include a bachelor's in history from Yale and a master's in political philosophy from the University of Chicago.

Mackenzie, 39, has been editor of the Richmond (Virginia) News Leader's editorial page since 1969, succeeding another conservative columnist James J. Kilpatrick.

In 1962, he assisted William F. Buckley Jr. on a book. In 1970, he hired cartoonist Jeff MacNelly, now one of the nation's few conservative editorial cartoonists.

Born and raised near Chicago, Mackenzie now lives in Richmond.

Roger Simon, a 34-year-old Chicago Sun-Times columnist, focuses on the human side of the news.

When covering the Middle East crisis, for instance, Simon interviews an Israeli war veteran for his story and then spent an evening at a Palestinian home interviewing a young man who pledged to fight and die for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Simon was editor of the college paper at the University of Illinois and was a reporter for the Danville Commercial News before joining the Sun-Times as a columnist in 1972.
