

New Jersey senator...

"Things are not going very well at all. What happened to all those promises the Republicans made in 1980?" he said.

"What we need now is a new GI Bill. The only way for people to buy a house now is the GI Bill - generous in-laws - that is," he said.

On other topics, Bradley said the Democrats will gain some seats in the November election but probably would not gain control of the Senate.

He said American farmers should be allowed to make long-term trade agreements with the Soviet Union to sell grain.

Bradley was in Nebraska to help Sen. Zorinsky win re-election and to help him become chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, he said.

Zorinsky said that the grain embargo "shot the farmer in the foot." The Secretary of Agriculture should be in charge of agriculture and all related areas, Zorinsky said. The State Department and the Office of Management and Budget "hold the ag department hostage," he said. Zorinsky said American farmers should be able to sign long-term agreements with the Soviet Union.

"This administration is not concerned about agriculture," Zorinsky said. "They said that commodity prices could be raised by exports but then they won't make five-year deals for grain."

The American farmer is being victimized by foreign competition, he said. West Germany, France and Japan put money into subsidies for agriculture instead of spending money on defense.

"Our so-called allies let us pay for their defense while they undercut the American farmer," Zorinsky said.

Recent polls show Zorinsky with a commanding lead over the Republican challenger, Jim Keck.

"I don't give a damn what the polls said," Zorinsky said. "This game isn't over until it's over."

Activities Director Boatman named national NACA chair

By Dawn Watson

"To have the opportunity to see a person go farther than they went before - to me that's the real reward to teaching. To make a difference in people's lives," Sara Boatman said, UNL director of Campus Activities and Programs. Boatman has received national recognition for her expertise in campus activities programming. By being named chairwoman-elect of the National Association for Campus Activities board of directors.

The NACA, an association of approximately 1,000 colleges, provides services to help program directors of campus activities at different schools more effectively.

Boatman's new position with the NACA is part of a three-year commitment, she said. Named to the position last spring, she will serve as chairwoman-elect until April.

Her duties include preparing to be chairwoman, serving as treasurer of NACA's $1 million budget, chairing the finance committee, chairing NACA's long-range planning committee and coordinating the executive training of the board of directors, Boatman said.

On May 1, she will begin a one-year term as chairwoman of the association's board of directors.

Boatman first became involved in campus activities as an undergraduate at Nebraska Wesleyan, she said. After graduation, she taught high school and then taught a communications class at Doane College.

In 1974 she became program adviser of the Union Program Department at UNL. In 1978 she was appointed UNL director of campus activities, a position she currently holds.

"I want to keep having jobs that are important and that fit my skills, and right now all that I want to do is be director of the CAP office," she said.

However, Boatman's many skills and interests have resulted in her working at several jobs at the same time. She currently teaches in the speech communication department and also leads workshops and retreats on motivation, recruitment, budgeting, time management and decision making for student organizations and student leaders, she said.

Boatman said her interest in students and their organizations has motivated her to pursue a doctorate in speech communication. She is working on her dissertation, which studies the relationship between communication effectiveness within an organization and an organization's effectiveness.

"My goal is to never stop teaching," she said. She especially likes working with college students because of their energy, candor, wide interests and their "sense of enjoyment of so many things," she said.
