

Silence isn't golden for trio

"... But in the grand scheme of things, does it really matter?" asked Dave, warming his hands on a Big Mac.

His two glum companions stared at the Ronald McDonald poster on the wall. Five minutes passed.

"Yes," said Sally, the female of the group. "We've got to talk."

"That's what we're here for, isn't it?" Bob, the

"Stop drumming your fingers impatiently on the windowsill, Dave," Sally said. "We're here to talk."

For 15 minutes, silent chewing prevailed.

Bob excused himself and was gone for about half an hour. When he returned, looking slightly green, Sally and Dave were engrossed in a crossword puzzle and sipping cold coffee.

"Where were you?"

speaking about the communication problems we've been having, or are we just going to ignore each other?"

Chew, chew.

The puzzles finished, the group sat back and eyeballed each other threateningly.

"What will this pregnant pause give birth to?" Sally wondered aloud.

"That's a nice shirt you have on, Dave," said Bob. "As a matter of fact, the one I've got on is almost like it."

"Gee, mine, too!" said Sally.

They compared shades of polyester. The last customers began filing out of the restaurant as the lights slowly dimmed.

"It's almost 11," Dave said.

The group, of one accord, stared at the luminous clock above the door. The second hand moved. Presently, the minute hand did too.

"We've got to talk," Bob said. "Shall we move on to O'Rourke's?"

Mary Louise Knapp

shy one, said hesitantly. "I suppose so," said Dave.

The three gazed at the ceiling. A surly employee began clearing their table and giving them ominous looks.

"Gosh, I'm hungrier than I thought," Sally remarked. "I'm going to get another Quarter Pounder."

"Can I go with you?" Dave and Bob asked simultaneously.

"I guess I'll stay here," said Dave, glaring at Bob.

"We should have gone to Wendy's. I miss the full-bodied flavor that extra 20 percent more meat adds to the burgers," Sally said.

"That's Burger King you're thinking of, you ignorant slob!" Bob said. Sally cast a vile look in his direction.

"That's the kind of stuff we're supposed to be talking about," she said.

The two collected their second courses of fast food and returned to the table. Dave drummed his fingers impatiently on the windowsill.

Dave asked. "Help me find a four-letter word for 'procrastinate.'"

"Bull," Sally muttered, a pencil clenched between her teeth.

"I don't think that's exactly what we need," Dave said.

Sally laid down her paper in exasperation.

"We've been here an hour and a half already. Now, are we going to

Pershing sets refund dates

The Judas Priest concert - which was originally scheduled for Sept. 16 but was canceled - will not be rescheduled.

Refunds will be available only until Wednesday.

Tickets bought at Brandeis must be returned there. Tickets purchased elsewhere should be returned to the Pershing Auditorium box office. A refund check will be mailed if tickets are sent to the box office.
