

Despite fumbles . . .

Osborne acknowledged that the defense bent, but didn't break, against K-State, which gained 124 yards rushing and 131 passing.

Although it was speculated that the Wildcats would come out throwing, trying to exploit Nebraska's pass defense, K-State threw only three passes in the first quarter. Osborne said he wasn't surprised that K-State ran so often.

The Wildcats' only touchdown came on a 27-yard drive after Mitch Krenk's third-quarter fumble.

Rozier's two scores, as well as touchdowns by Doug

Wilkening (3-yard run), Williams (2-yard pass from Gill), Jeff Smith (19-yard run) and Bruce Mathison (5-yard run) helped offset the turnovers.

Osborne said the Huskers emerged from the game with fewer injuries than usual.

Bret Clark and Rozier suffered hip pointers, but both should recover quickly, Osborne said. Defensive tackle Doug Herrmann should be ready for the Missouri game this Saturday after recovering from knee surgery, and wingback Irving Fryar should be at almost 100 percent after sitting out two games with an ankle injury, Osborne said.
