

Farm animals delight children on East Campus

Kids' Day, a petting zoo for children in the Lincoln Public Schools and day care centers, was held Friday on East Campus. The event is an annual activity sponsored by the UNL Block and Bridle Club.

About 700 children attended the event in the Livestock Judging Pavilion to pet various farm animals.

"Most kids don't get to see what farm animals look like," said Jack Dye, member of the Block and Bridle Club. "That's why we are having this. This way they can see what farm animals look like."

Melissa Hynes, also a Block and Bridle Club member, said there were relatively few problems with either the animals or the children.

"Most of the children liked them," she said. "We did have a little trouble with the donkey. He was kicking, but we took him out. He didn't hurt any of the children."

Hynes said the animals they display for Kids' Day have worked around people, so they are tame. As for questions asked by the children, Hynes had one favorite.

"One little girl asked if the tag in the lamb's ear was a barrette," she said.

The children got to see and pet a variety of animals. There was a mule, a Clydesdale horse, sheep, baby pigs and chickens.

Forty members of the Block and Bridle Club helped make sure the children and animals got along well.

"They came in at various times to make sure the kids didn't get too friendly with the animals," Dye said.

When it came to the children, most were impressed with the very small or very large animals. The squeals of the baby pigs made quite an impression on many.
