

Iba: Starting lineup not yet determined

With an opening-season exhibition game against the University of Windsor less than two weeks away, Nebraska basketball Coach Moe Iba said he doesn't have any idea who will be in the starting lineup.

"At this point, everybody has an opportunity to start," Iba, who is entering his third full season as head coach, said. Although there has been a tremendous amount of competition for the starting spots, he said, no player has been consistently impressive in practice.

Iba said he has been impressed with the progress of Eric Williams. Williams, a 6-2 guard who played for the Huskers his freshman and sophomore years, is rebounding from a leg injury that forced him to sit through a redshirt year last season.

"He is gaining his speed," Iba said, "and I'm pleased with the way he has come off the surgery." He added that the team is free of injuries.

The Husker seniors have provided leadership for the team, Iba said. Greg Downing, Lenard Johnson, Claude Renfro, Terry Smith and Kenny Walton work hard in practices, he said, and set a good example for the younger players.

Iba said the Huskers are not executing well on offense or defense, which concerns him. Less defensive progress has been made this year than last year at this time, he said.

Iba said practices have been difficult to evaluate. The team is trying to put what was stressed in practice into actual playing situations, he said.
