

Offensive line clears way for NU ball carriers

By Tad Stryker

Take it from Mike Rozier: running behind an offensive line like Nebraska's improves an I-back's frame of mind, not to mention his statistics.

Rozier said the Huskers probably have the best collegiate offensive front in the nation.

"That's one of the reasons I came here," the transfer from Coffeyville (Kan.) Junior College said. "At other places, you're more likely to get beat up."

Rozier has not gone through the season unscathed — a hip pointer and a sprained wrist have given him some trouble — but he has emerged as a darkhorse Heisman Trophy candidate while running behind the line spearheaded by Outland Award winner Dave Rimington.

The Husker center said that although he has been getting national acclaim, the rest of the offensive line has been underrated.

Teammates deserve credit

Guards Mike Mandelko and Dean Steinkuhler and tackles Randy Theiss and Jeff Kwapick have been doing their jobs well, he said.

"I feel proud to be a part of this team," Rimington said.

Theiss has started with Rimington since they were sophomores in 1980. Mandelko also saw playing time as a sophomore, and started last year. Kwapick started part time last year, and Steinkuhler, the only junior of the five, lettered as a reserve.

Experience is the major factor in the line's success, according to Rimington.

"It's our knowledge of the game," he said. "We have a pretty good idea of what the other players are doing."

The line works well together, Rimington said.

"We try and help one another out," he said. "If one guy breaks down, it makes us all look bad."

The five have avoided looking bad while clearing the way for Husker ball carriers to average nearly 400 yards a game, far more than second-place Oklahoma's average.

Strong line executes well

"We know what we're doing," Kwapick said. "As far as executing goes, I'd say we're one of the best."

Kwapick didn't put as much emphasis on the thinking part of the game.

"We're pretty physical, too," he said. "We're probably the strongest offensive line we've had since I've been here."

Kwapick, a fifth-year senior, credited the Husker weight training program for the Huskers' strength advantage.

"It's gotten tougher and more involved every year," he said.

Rimington credited part of the Huskers' success to their depth. The second-string line — composed of center Brad Johnson, tackle Scott Raridon and Mark Traynowicz, and guards Kurt Glathar and Harry Grimminger — has been playing "real well," Rimington said.

"Anytime you get two lines that can go, it helps a lot, especially in hot games," he said. "In the Iowa and Auburn games, we just wore out the defense."

Coach Tom Osborne has noted that this year's tight ends and wingbacks are the best Husker blockers he's seen at those positions since he's been coaching at Nebraska.

The receivers' main contribution is usually in downfield blocking, which, according to Rozier, is better than ever this season.

"I'm not worrying about who's going to block for me next year," he said. "There's going to be somebody experienced there."
