

UNL pageant winner to be on 'Newsviews'

"Newsviews," a program featuring the community and university, is appearing on Cablevision channel 10 Thursdays at 6:30 p.m., said Liz Burden, executive producer of the show.

Each program of the show includes two features on members of the community or the university. Another segment of each show will profile an individual, Burden said.

Rosalind Moore, winner of last week's Miss Black UNL pageant, will be featured on this week's show.

The show's production company is trying to find people to underwrite various segments of future shows, Burden said. Cablevision is supplying the equipment.

"We hope that the community and university students will support the program so that we'll have a base to move on to other projects," she said.

Anyone interested in working for "Newsviews" should contact Burden.

Tree to light up yuletide spirits

By Martin Neary

For more than 50 years, the Salvation Army's Tree of Lights and fund-raising activities have been a staple in commemorating the Christmas season.

It is an annual, nationwide activity of the Salvation Army to raise money so that the Christmas spirit can reach the homes of low-income families, Salvation Army Maj. Dale Tollerud said Tuesday.

The Tree of Lights campaign is only a part of this year's program, which also includes bell ringing, promotions by businesses and donations of time by people working to reach a $70,000 goal, Tollerud said.

Bob Hope is the 1982 national chairman of the campaign. In Lincoln, Police Chief Dean Leitner will be the honorary chairman.

Bell ringing is probably one of the largest sources of organized income, Leitner said.

"I can't recall another time, because of our economic situation, that there has been a larger demand for aid from the (Salvation) Army," said Leitner, who has been on the Salvation Army's board of directors for about five years.

Problem raised

The state of the economy "does raise a problem in the fund-raising effort as far as citizens out there being able to donate," he said.

The impact of 650 people losing their jobs at the American Stores beef-processing plant, various layoffs and the fact that people are not getting salary increases reflects the need for the Salvation Army, he said.

Last year, 8,000 families received aid, mostly in the form of food vouchers and free toys, he said. The Salvation Army distributed about 25,000 toys. Grocery vouchers, which are checks for food, worth $40,000 were provided to more than 3,000 people.

Because of the recession and unemployment, Tollerud expects the number of applicants for aid to increase by 25 percent.

Applications for aid from the Salvation Army are expected to rise, but local business promotions will try to meet the demand.

Valentino's will sponsor a Valentino's Day, and KLIN radio and an amateur radio group will sponsor a Toy-A-Thon in an attempt to collect 1,000 new or slightly used toys for the Salvation Army toy shop. The toys will be given away Dec. 20 through 22 at the shop.

Promotions planned

First National Bank will be leading a Dress-the-Doll promotion. First National will buy the dolls, disperse them to the community to dress and they give them away.

The Christmas activities will start Wednesday, when 65 different service clubs and organizations will begin ringing bells.

The Salvation Army also will provide a Christmas Day dinner for the homeless men living at the Salvation Army center at Seventh and P streets.

To apply for food and toys, families should report to 2625 Potter St. before Dec. 17. A card file is kept for 10 years on families who receive aid to prevent duplicate gifts, although any family may reapply each year, he said.

The Tree of Lights will stand by the NBC Center at 12th and O streets. The tree will be lit Wednesday at 5 p.m. In cooperation with all downtown businesses, all downtown lights will be turned on at the same time.

School strives to obtain accreditation

UNL's School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation is revamping its curriculum in order to meet guidelines for accreditation.

Bill Murphy, assistant professor of health, physical education and recreation, said the accreditation drive is a joint effort of two national organizations, the National Recreation and Park Association and the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance.

The groups' purpose, according to Murphy, is to assure a "certain standard of quality" in the 280-300 recreation department curricula in the United States. Of these departments, Murphy said, only 28 are now accredited.

UNL is applying for accreditation for the first time, he said. The process began last year in the second semester, and Murphy said he expects to submit the finished application in February.

Murphy said the present curriculum will have to be modified somewhat to meet the accreditation requirements.

He said the guidelines require that some courses be combined and others added. For example, the guidelines state that every recreation department should have a course in recreation and park planning. The course deals with the design and development of park areas and facilities.

Murphy said that after a committee composed of members of the two organizations receives the application, it will examine it for six weeks. After that, a study team will be sent to UNL to examine the actual program.
