

Outstanding NMUN participants named

By Lauri Hopple

UNL student Jim Rogers, a member of the delegation representing the United States, was awarded a $100 scholarship for Outstanding College Delegate Saturday, for his performance during the three-day 1983 Nebraska Model United Nations conference. A $50 scholarship went to Jeanne Demma of Pius X High School in Lincoln. She was named recipient of the Outstanding High School Delegate award. She was a member of the delegation of Ireland.

The scholarships were donated by the United Nations Association of Lincoln.

The Lincoln Southeast delegation, representing the African country of Togo, was named Best High School Delegation. The Best College Delegation Award was given to Israel, whose delegation members came from Creighton University.

NMUN Secretary General John Sunnygard said he believed that Yehuda Blum's keynote speech Thursday night influenced the NMUM Israeli delegation's performance throughout the conference. Blum is the Israeli ambassador to the United States.

"It (the speech) gave them more confidence because it showed them that they could represent a country that everyone else hates," Sunnygard said.

Copies of resolutions passed by the delegations will be sent to the approximately 300 participants of the conference. Sunnygard said the resolutions included statements on nuclear weapons and chemical/biological weapons. Also passed was a resolution calling for removal of foreign military support in Central American countries. The resolution was weak, Sunnygard said, because both the United States and Soviet Union delegations opposed it.

Sunnygard said this year's NMUN conference went smoothly and evaluations by every delegate expressed favorable remarks about the conference.

"This (year's) is definitely the best Security Council I've ever seen," Sunnygard said. "The delegates on it were very well-prepared and the staff just did an outstanding job."

Planning for the 1984 NMUN has begun. Sunnygard said applications for positions on next year's staff are available in the UPC or the CAP offices in the Nebraska Union.

Better promotion to attract greater student involvement will be a major element in preparing for the 1984 NMUN, Sunnygard said.

Women's forum examines educational discrimination

By Margaret Reist

Sub-zero weather, snow and ice are not the only reasons the UNL campus has a chilly atmosphere for female college students.

It can be uncomfortable for women in spring, summer, fall or winter, and a February forum called "The University: A Chilly Climate For Women" discusses the reasons why, and what can be done about them.

The Chancellor's Commission on the Status of Women is a body of nine representatives who monitor and respond to women's issues on campus and give input to the chancellor.

The commission began organizing the forum in October. When the chancellor declared this year the "year of the learning environment," it was decided to have one month about women's issues, Jackie Henningsen, program chairwoman of the forum and commission representative, said.

The forum's main event will be a speech, panel discussion and question-and-answer period with UNL Chancellor Martin Massengale and four panelists from the Nebraska Commission on the Status of Women. The panel discussion is today from 1:30 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the lounge of the Nebraska Union.

Differences in attitudes begin occurring when women start graduate school, Henningsen said. There is a retention of the idea that women can always back out of graduate school and get married, she said. Therefore, they often are not taken as seriously as male students.

"We are interested in the classroom climate — in learning equally open to males and females," she said.

A study of American colleges, the impetus for the forum idea, showed that blatant discrimination does not exist in colleges, Henningsen said. However, the study showed that subtle discrimination played down the female students' seriousness.

Meat judges give 'Choice' performance

The NU junior meat judging team placed third in the Southwestern Exposition and Fat Stock Show Intercollegiate Meats Judging Contest in Dallas.

Oklahoma State University placed first, followed by Colorado State University. Dwight Loveday, assistant professor of animal science at UNL, is the team's coach. Team members Kenny Miller and Kent Andersen placed fourth and fifth in overall judging. Jeff Rudolph placed second in beef judging. All three are sophomore agriculture majors. The team placed third in beef grading, fifth in pork judging and sixth in both lamb and beef judging.
