

Thirteen UNL students recipients of Vreeland Award for creativity

Thirteen UNL students received Vreeland Awards last Friday afternoon in the annual awards program in Sheldon Film Theatre.

Beginning in 1959, William Francis Vreeland bequeathed funds to UNL to be awarded "for exceptional creative ability" in the fields of art, English and music. The award is in cash to be used in any way the recipient wishes.

Following a talk at the awards presentations by Gerhard Meisels, interim dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the winners in the English and music departments performed or read their works.

Eric Ottem read the final scene from his prose work "Rotten Apples," a story about a Sisyphus-like parks employee.

Kathleene West read the poem "Wind-chill" from her collection "One Winter Hour." West, who recently received her doctorate in English, will be continuing her studies on a Fulbright scholarship at the University of Iceland.

In the field of musical composition, the audience was treated to a haunting Frank Wilhoit arrangement of a Blake piece for vocal soloist and french horn, composed by David Scholl and four short pieces for string quartet by Laura Copple.

The awards recipients in art were: undergraduates Jenny Fisher, Ron Furrer, Rebecca Ross and Mike Whiteley, and graduate students Terry Adkinson, Scott Bishop, Craig Smith and John Swindell.
