NFL draft picks rest assured

By Randy Wymore

The NFL draft is over. It is for Cornhuskers Dave Rimington, Jamie Williams and Roger Craig, anyway.

Rimington was the 25th player picked in the draft Monday, going to the Cincinnati Bengals. Craig went next — in the third round — to the 49ers of San Francisco, while Williams is headed to New Jersey and the New York Giants.

At a press conference Wednesday, both Williams and Rimington said that they were relieved the waiting was finally over, and happy with their new homes.

"The hardest thing about the whole deal is waiting," Rimington, who has gone without sleep for 30 hours, said. "But it's a good feeling and I hope I can contribute to the team."

Rimington also told reporters that being a first-round pick meant realization of a long time dream.

"I want to play football and it's a great opportunity," he said. "I've always dreamed of being a first-round pick."

Williams was especially pleased with his new situation.

"That's the team that I wanted to play for," Williams said of the Giants. "New York seemed like the place for me."

Williams said that a conversation he had with Giant Coach Bill Parcells gave him a boost in confidence going into Monday's festivities.

"He told me I was in the best position of any tightend in the country to get drafted today."

When asked why he thought he didn't go higher in the draft, the second tight end to be picked said that the teams began to "play a game." After the first defensive back was picked, Williams said that he felt the other teams didn't want to miss out on the others; consequently, there was a lengthy run on defensive secondary positions.

As it turned out, Williams waited until the beginning of the third round and the Giants' fourth pick of the day. The only other tight end drafted ahead of Williams was Notre Dame's Tony Hunter.

Both Rimington and Williams were at home watching the draft on ESPN.

"I'm real happy to be the second tight-end picked," Williams said. "That means the world to me."

There is a strong possibility that Rimington will be switched from center to guard. But he doesn't have any qualms about the supposed move.

As for his situation with the Boston Breakers of the USFL, Rimington said everything is still pretty much up in the air. The Breakers offered Rimington a sizable amount of money when they chose him in their draft in January, and should that offer exceed the one which will be made by the Bengals, Rimington will have another decision to make.

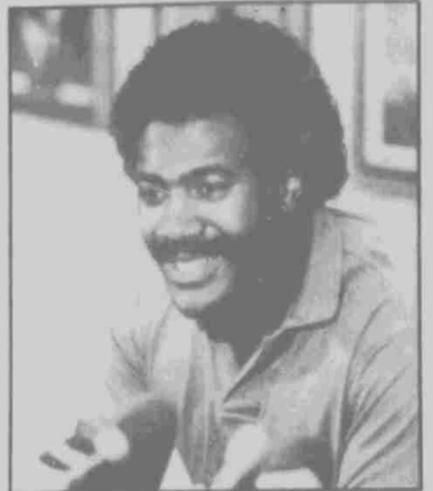

"I'd have to think about it very seriously," he said. "But that's up to my agent. That's why I hired him."

Craig was at his home in Davenport, Iowa, and could not be reached for comment.
