On the contrary, they say, members' lives have changed because of "the miracle God can work in a person's life," as Lange put it. He compared conversion to the Unification Church to the conversion of St. Paul to Christianity on the road to Damascus.

"That's such a classic example," Lange said. "Can you imagine what his parents said?"

McInerheny cited instructions this year from Moon that tell members to write their families once a week as evidence that the church is not against members having contact with their parents.

Lange said he has called and written his parents, but they have not taken the initiative to respond.

The goal of the Unification Church is a revolution, McInerheny said, not with guns and bombs, but by making people realize they are God's children, by breaking down barriers that separate believers into
