Library's security increases prompted by women's group

BY JOANNE YOUNG

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln has responded to concerns by women about personal security in the Love Library complex by installing security devices, according to a UN-L libraries official.

After meeting with representatives from Women Against Violence Against Women and campus police, library and university officials installed security devices such as convex mirrors, intercoms and surveillance cameras, said Larry Kahle, personnel and budget officer for the UN-L library system.

Lighting changes have been made to improve safety in the stacks, Kahle said. Lights in the Love South stacks will now be controlled by a central panel so lights can not be shut off except by library personnel.

Eight convex mirrors have been installed in Love South so that persons going up or down the stairs can see anyone who might be "lurking" around the corners, Kahle said. Four more mirrors have been ordered for those stairs.

Workers are installing intercoms in Love South and North which will be connected to the circulation desk in Love South. Kahle said if there is a security problem, a person could talk directly with someone at the desk to get help if needed. Sixteen intercoms are being installed.

Surveillance cameras have been ordered and will be put into the library as soon as possible, Kahle said. The cameras will be modular and will be moved within the library and to other buildings as needed, he said.

In Love North, anyone entering or leaving by the east or west doors will trigger an alarm, which will bring security personnel to find out why the doors were used.

Kahle said no security devices have been ordered for other libraries on the UN-L campus because they don't have the security problems of Love Library. Love has security problems because of its size and the number of people that use the building, he said. In the past year, several sexual assaults, indecent exposures and other assaults have been reported in the library.

The UN-L police department helped as consultants for the additional security devices, according to Bob Fey, Crime Prevention Investigator.

Fey said he hopes improvements in security at Love Library will make people more relaxed about using the library.

Money for the additional security came from the vice-chancellor's office for business and finance. The lighting changes were paid for from the library budget.

Groundwater generally higher in Nebraska tests

Water levels rose in more than three-fourths of Nebraska's observation wells in 1982, according to a report published by the University of Nebraska Conservation and Survey Division and the U.S. Geological Survey.

The report, written by Martin S. Johnson of the Geological Survey and Darryll T. Pederson of the Conservation and Survey Division, said 1982 was the second year in a row that more wells in the state experienced rises than declines.

Most groundwater levels were one to five feet higher than in 1981, the report said, except in some east-central and panhandle counties where rises of five to 18 feet were common.

Copies of the new report, number WSP-56, are available for $2 each from the Conservation and Survey Division, 113 Nebraska Hall, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Lincoln, Neb. 68588-0517. Nebraska residents should add sales tax when ordering.

Gays: media barred to spare persecution

BY JOANNE YOUNG

Gay and lesbian civil rights are the focus of a regional conference scheduled this Friday and Saturday at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

The weekend conference is sponsored by the Lincoln Coalition for Gay and Lesbian Civil Rights, a group that became active about two years ago to make Lincoln residents aware of gay rights issues.

The coalition will bring three speakers to Lincoln for the conference: State Senator Allan Spear of Minnesota; Father John McNeill, author of "The Church and the Homosexual"; and Carol Lease, director of a gay community center in Colorado.

The coalition has closed the Saturday conference to the media. A spokesman for the coalition, executive committee member Glenn Phlum, said some people might not attend the conference if it were open. Phlum said that people attending a hearing last year were seen on TV and had problems at work as a result.

Some gays were concerned about an incident that occurred in another state in which a newspaper printed names and addresses of gays testifying at a public hearing, but didn't do the same for those testifying who weren't gay, Phlum said.

"Some people are insensitive," Phlum said, "or they haven't been educated to the (gay) issues."

Phlum said Lincoln gays and lesbians have kept a low profile since the defeat of a proposed gay rights ordinance last spring in Lincoln. The coalition has sponsored several events, but information wasn't released to the media.

"We were still nursing our wounds," Phlum said. "We didn't tell the media because we didn't want picketing at the events."

Phlum said Lincoln gays were pretty sure the ordinance wasn't going to pass but it was still "real painful."

Since the failure of the ordinance, Phlum said, things haven't changed much for gays in Lincoln. Discrimination continues, but people seem to be more aware of gay rights issues, he said.

"People who were not willing to be public a year ago still are not willing to be public," he said. "They might have felt more open if the ordinance had passed. They would not have feared losing their jobs."

Phlum said gays in the coalition do not intend to work on another gay rights ordinance.

Computers to help speed registration

BY BILL CONRADT

Computers will offer students some new services during fall general registration, said the director of registration and records at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Ted Pfeifer said the key is an improved information system which helps both students and employees receive better information on closed and alternate courses. In addition, the time involved in registration will be reduced.

The new computers were used first during this summer's pre-session and eight-week session. Pfeifer said the registration office has used summer registration to work out problems in preparation for fall. So far, the system shortened the time students needed for general registration from 30-to-40 minutes to 12-to-25 minutes.

"When it works, it works well," he said.

But on a ten-point scale, Pfeifer said he would rate it a six because of bugs such as computer system malfunction. Also, the system does not produce ID cards for every student going through drop-add, a problem Pfeifer has been unable to identify so far.

Traffic flow in the registration office, 103 Administration, caused by both summer and fall drop-add also has caused problems with the new system.

The system's advantage is accuracy.

The correction rosters sent to instructors for the first five-week session had few mistakes, Pfeifer said.

Another advantage of the system, according to Tony Schkade, assistant director of registration and records, has been its ability to verify information at the time of registration.

Briefs from NU campuses

Federal loan applications open

UN-O — Students planning to enroll in the University of Nebraska-Omaha may still apply for federal financial aid for the 1983-84 academic year. UN-O Director of Financial Aids Robert Pike said students may be eligible for guaranteed student loans, Pell grants or jobs through the college work-study program.

Microcomputer courses offered

UN-O — The Center for Professional and Organizational Development at the University of Nebraska-Omaha is offering two short courses in the use of microcomputers during July.

"1-2-3 — An Introduction to Financial Modeling on Microcomputers" is a two-day course at the Peter Kiewit Conference Center in downtown Omaha, Tuesday, July 26, 8:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Wednesday, July 27, 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. "1-2-3," a new financial software package, was developed to help managers and planners solve problems with a business microcomputer.

"VisiCalc — An Introduction to Financial Modeling on Microcomputers," will be held July 28-29 at the Peter Kiewit Conference Center, 13th and Farnam streets, 8:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The course is designed for persons having no prior experience with microcomputers.

Performing Arts Series canceled

UN-L — The Kimball Performing Arts Series at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln has announced that the Actors Theatre of Louisville performances scheduled for the 1983-84 season have been canceled. The performances involved are "Lone Star," and "Eye of the Beholder" on March 16, 1984, and "Talking With" on March 17, 1984. Those who ordered tickets will be receiving reimbursement checks in the mail in the next few weeks. Questions should be directed to the Kimball box office at 472-3375, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

the wall," he said. "We don't have the energy."

He said this conference was publicized because the group wanted people to see that it hasn't disappeared.

The purpose of the conference is to bring people together, to let them know the group exists, Phlum said. He said he hopes it will also be a problem-sharing and problem-solving experience.

"We want to give them something useful to take away with them," Phlum said.

About 50 people are registered for the conference which is being limited to gays, lesbians and those who support gay civil rights. There is a $25 registration fee. Walk-in participants can register Friday night at First United Methodist Church, 2723 N. 50th St.
