The coverings are durable, he said. They can be vacuumed, and water does not damage them. If a square is stained, it can be replaced.

Once the walls, floor and windows are set, the student can accessorize the room to reflect his or her interests, Van Dervoort said.

"Plants always make a room look lively and pleasant," she said. The potted plants can be put in inexpensive baskets.

Basket, wicker and ratan chairs are also good decorating ideas.

Creal said buri chairs, made of a flexible fiber, can be bought at Pier 1 Imports for $30, and a "king chair" costs $40.

Van Dervoort also suggested colorful beanbag and director's chairs.

"Use a lot of pillows, too," she said. Pillows of various sizes and colors can be put on a mattress and springs against a wall to serve as a couch.

Lee Ann Patterson, an interior designer with Van Dervoort & Van Dervoort Inc., graduated from UNL two years ago. She said she lived in Smith Hall when she lived on campus.

Magazines often give good ideas for sleeping and shelving in small spaces, Patterson said.

"Bunk beds save a lot of space," she said.

Boards propped on cement blocks and then painted make sturdy shelves for stereo equipment or a television.

She also suggested putting wooden shelves between the steps of two step ladders for a different look.

Kim Grossoehme, a UNL senior in commercial interior design, also suggested using a wooden ladder to decorate a room.

"Put plants on each step," she said. An old ladder has more "personality" than a metal one. "The more beat up it is, the better."

Grossoehme, a member of the Delta Gamma sorority, said with a little creativity, a student can do "thousands of things" on a small budget.

She painted a galvanized metal trash can white, and then painted colorful designs on it.

"It can be used for storage or as a dirty clothes basket," she said, "and it saves space and can be left in the middle of the room."

Trash cans cost between $10 and $15 at hardware stores. A wicker hamper can be used for the same purpose, and it also saves closet space, she said.

"Colorful tack paper used to line shelves can brighten up a lot of things," she said.

The paper can be cut in strips and stuck along the top of the wall as a ceiling border.

The paper costs about $2 a roll, she said, "and it peels right off," when it's time to move.

Thrift and antique stores are full of old items to fix up, Grossoehme said.

For example, old trunks can be painted and then used to store sweaters. Colored milk crates can be used as shelves for books or stereo equipment.

"You can put anything on walls," she said. Her suggestions included wicker baskets, matted prints, posters and old hats.

When decorating, she said, "Let your imagination go."
