Sites for bookstore, Culture Center studied

Proposed changes for the University Bookstores and the Culture Center highlighted the Nebraska Union Board's first meeting of the fall term Tuesday.

Union Director Daryl Swanson said he was pleased with the participation of the members who were active on the board during the summer. Several members met three times to keep informed on major issues such as the new bookstore and Culture Center.

Swanson said he is awaiting a final report from a professional bookstore consultant who is evaluating the possible relocation and consolidation of the three University Bookstores. The consultant supported a plan to construct a new bookstore across the mall from the Nebraska Union in the grassy area directly in front of the Selleck Quadrangle. Another plan would move the bookstores into the Union's recreation and bowling areas, with a small addition being built for office space, Swanson said.

The building at 1633 Q St. has been selected as a potential site for relocation of the Culture Center. Swanson has toured the building and said he found it suitable. He said he will refer the idea to the Culture Center task force.

The Planning Committee reported that a revamped floor plan for the South Crib was being studied. Swanson said it has been 14 years since the Crib was last changed and the unions hope to have the design completed and contractors hired by May so work can begin next summer. The lounge, dining area and stage are unattractive in their present arrangement, Swanson said, so the stage will be moved to one end to facilitate its use.
