Computer services put Lincoln on-line

By Christopher Burbach

Three new computer businesses in the city offer a variety of services to Lincoln residents and the university community in particular.

The Computer Complex, an office building at 1630 Q St., houses two separate businesses, said Curtis Lampe, store owner of one of the businesses — Micro/Serve, Inc. The store has a variety of micro-computer systems that "anyone can come in and use," for a basic rate of $6 per hour, he said.

The rate includes the use of a Radio Shack TRS 80 computer, a printer, disc drives and any software. An additional charge is levied for using specialized equipment, such as a letter-quality printer, he said.

Lampe said the main thing for which UNL students could use Micro/Serve is for preparing term papers and theses.

"It's easier to do it on a computer," he said. "It can be done in sections; you don't have to have it done all at once. You can leave it in the computer, then you don't have to worry about printing it out until it's completely done," he added.

Lampe said no computer experience is required to use his service and instruction is provided.

"We could have someone up and typing in a document in 15 minutes," he said.

Micro/Serve will also offer computer programming for students, Lampe said. He also said he hopes to establish communication lines with the university computer system.

Computer Type, a computer typing service, is the other business in the Computer Complex. The service has been open since February, said Brenda Murkle, store manager.
