

Instructors get TLC, encouragement at center

At UNL, a state university serving 25,000 students, the 100 level survey courses which fill Love Library Auditorium seem a fact of academic life.

Frustrating as it may be for students tired of being nameless faces in the crowd, it is even more so for instructors who must keep the interest of 100 or more students while teaching 1,800 years of history in 18 weeks.

But help and possible solutions for these and other problems encountered by instructors are available at the UNL Teaching and Learning Center. TLC, opened in 1971 and budgeted by the Legislature, offers a number of services to encourage innovative teaching ideas and maintain or restore a high degree of interest and motivation in teaching.

The service is offered to the faculty with "no strings attached," said Delivee Wright, TLC director. It is a service available on an entirely voluntary, request basis and is completely confidential.

Services range from consultation, designed to help instructors analyze their teaching methods and make modifications, to various workshops, seminars and discussion groups. The center also publishes a newsletter, one of which received national recognition on the topic of "Classroom Climate for Women."

The center recently received a one year, $13,000 Kelly II Grant that is being used to gather objective data from academic records on teaching large classes and how teaching methods must differ between large and small classes.

Also funded by a foundation grant, the Career Enrichment program is in its second year of a three year Jane Layman Grant of $175,000. At its inception, Dan Wheeler was hired as a faculty career consultant to work with faculty on career development. Issues such as retirement planning, managing stress and how to get more satisfaction from teaching, are dealt with, Wright said.

Other services include: a reference library, student questionnaires, interviews with students and videotapes of the classroom so the instructor may see his class from a student's viewpoint. The teacher can use these services to analyze his or her teaching methods. Observers from the center also may attend the class. The center then works with the faculty as a team to improve the situation, Wright said.

"We are not saying, 'Here is the right way to teach' ". she said. "There are many ways to teach, and the center is there to provide alternative methods and the rationales for those changes."

TLC also provides examination services. It scores computerized tests used primarily by large classes.
