Before the first game, signs will be posted in parking lots to remind NU fans that Nebraska Revised Statute 53-816 prohibits consumption of alcoholic beverages on state property. Officers also will patrol the parking areas, "advising the fans not to consume," he said.

Inside the gates, officers will continue to patrol for illegal beverages. If a person is seen drinking alcohol, the drink will be confiscated. Lincoln police also will join campus police to watch for illegal vendors in and around the stadium during the games. These include ticket scalpers and anyone else selling things without a vending permit. LPD Cpt. Jim Baird said vendors with permits have filed many complaints about their illegal competitors.

Baird said he expects more ticket scalper arrests, which will keep walks and crowded streets more clear. He estimated $25 to $100 fines for illegal vending in the stadium area.

Baird said that Lincoln police agreed to work with campus police because of "overlapping" in the previous years. If illegal vendors were told to leave city property, they often simply moved to campus property. The campus police then would force the illegal vendors back off campus property. Cooperating forces will work more effectively, he said.

Another security measure that the police are planning for the first time in 10 years involves keeping the gates shut during the entire game. In the past, the gates have been opened at the end of the third quarter.

Burke said the reason the gates will not be opened this season is to prevent crowds around the sidelines in the already-filled stadium.

Keeping the gates shut also will allow first aid and law enforcement personnel to move more freely, he said. Television trucks also have had trouble moving down crowded sidelines.

Getting to the stadium may be harder for out-of-town fans because of road construction on the Interstate State Patrol officer Vern Scharff said. He suggested drivers use alternate routes.

Baird said that once they arrive in Lincoln, fans should park at Southeast Community College because of limited campus parking. Other parking spots include lots at 84th and O streets or Holmes Lake. Shuttle buses will run between these locations and Memorial Stadium.

Parking and shuttle buses also will be available at the State Fairgrounds. However, because the first home game falls during the State Fair, he said, parking there will be more limited. Shuttle buses will load at the south end of the Bob Devaney Sports Center for the Sept. 10 game only. People parking at the fairgrounds usually will board the shuttle buses on the 14th Street side of the fairgrounds.

Vehicles that are not parked in legal parking spots will be towed, Burke said. Vehicles parked on the grass, sidewalks, or in reserved stalls also will be towed. The car's owner will be responsible for towing costs, he said. Towing costs are usually $20 plus a $3 per day storage fee.

The UNL Police also encourage people to lock their cars and put any valuables in their trunks.
