Banker: Farm future looks good

By Judi Nygren

The president of Grand Island's National Bank of Commerce painted an optimistic picture for Nebraska farmers Friday, but warned that circumstances can change quickly in the agricultural sector.

Thomas Henning, speaking at Lincoln Kiwanis Club meeting, described the changes that have benefited the agricultural economy of the state and the nation.

"After three years of virtual depression, the nation's farmers can look forward to better times," Henning said.

Many economists predict net farm income will reach a high of $22.6 billion in 1983. Henning said that is a 43 percent rise over 1982's $18.6 billion.

In July and August 1983, prices paid to state farmers reached the second highest level on record.

According to the Nebraska Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, average prices paid ranged from $3.10 a bushel in July to $3.50 a bushel in August.

Henning said three factors come into play when discussing the July and August upswing. He said they are "controversial payment and time program; the widespread drought, which is forecasted to result in the smallest corn crop since 1974; and the Soviet five-year grain agreement, which obligates the Soviets to buy at least nine million metric tons annually."

Henning said that while the forecast looks good, "everything is relative."

"Production costs (for July and August) were significantly higher than they were in 1974," he said.

Henning predicted grain prices will remain stable over the next 12 months.

He said he also looks for the grain export market to improve to the deal with Russia and pending grain agreements with the Chinese.
