Nebraska rodeo queen hits the trails to boost professional bronco-busts

By Stacie Thomas

Nebraska's Miss Rodeo 1983 said the most important aspect of being crowned rodeo queen is the chance to promote Nebraska and professional rodeo.

Chris Wallace, a UNL junior, recently was named Miss Rodeo Nebraska.

She won the appearance, personality and governor's speech awards at the rodeo queen pageant in Aug. She also was judged on her horsemanship and her knowledge of Western fashion and of professional rodeo.

Her job as queen is to promote professional rodeo in Nebraska and to attend as many rodeos as possible. She appeared at the Nebraska State Fair and said she expects to make one or two appearances each weekend. She said she won't just sit in the stands and look pretty, however.

"A rodeo queen is expected to be able to hop on any horse, as well as work cattle if needed," she said.

Wallace also will appear on morning talk shows in Lincoln and Omaha. She will represent Nebraska in the Miss Rodeo America Pageant in November.

Wallace said she believes the personal appearances and interviews will help her in her broadcasting major. She said she would like eventually to work in television, either as an on-the-air personality or in production. She also expressed an interest in graduate school.

Wallace is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and UNL's varsity speech team.
