Foreign students dance night away

About 250 students heeded a call of "Let's dance" Friday night and enjoyed six hours of popular, rock and new wave music at the International Students Dance in the Nebraska Union Ballroom.

The dance was sponsored by the International Students Organization and radio station KXSS, which provided the music.

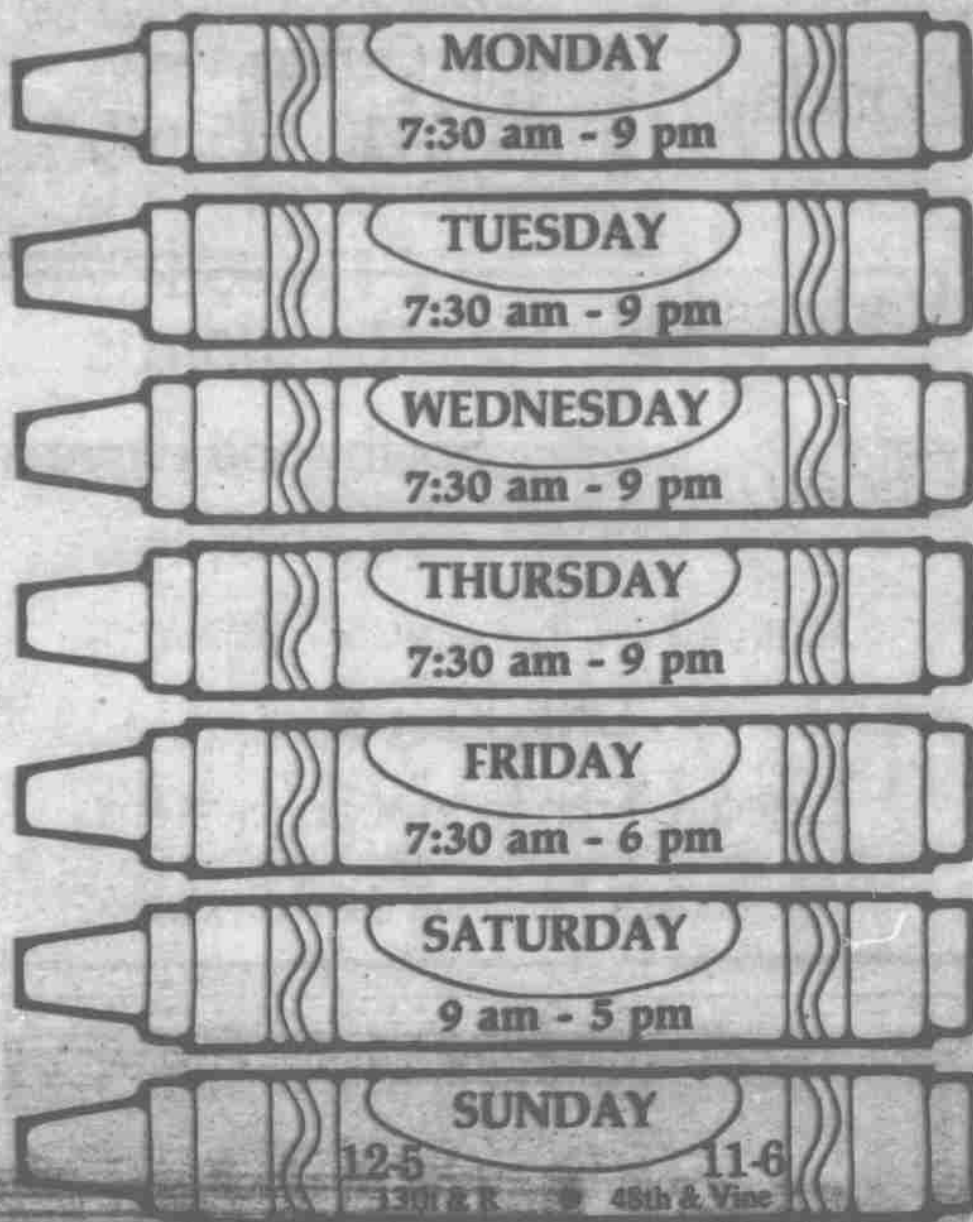

Several students interviewed at the dance said they thought the event was a good way to get international and American students together.

"I think American students should realize that these events aren't just for foreign students but also for American students to get involved in," said Joe Bush, a sophomore majoring in international affairs and German.

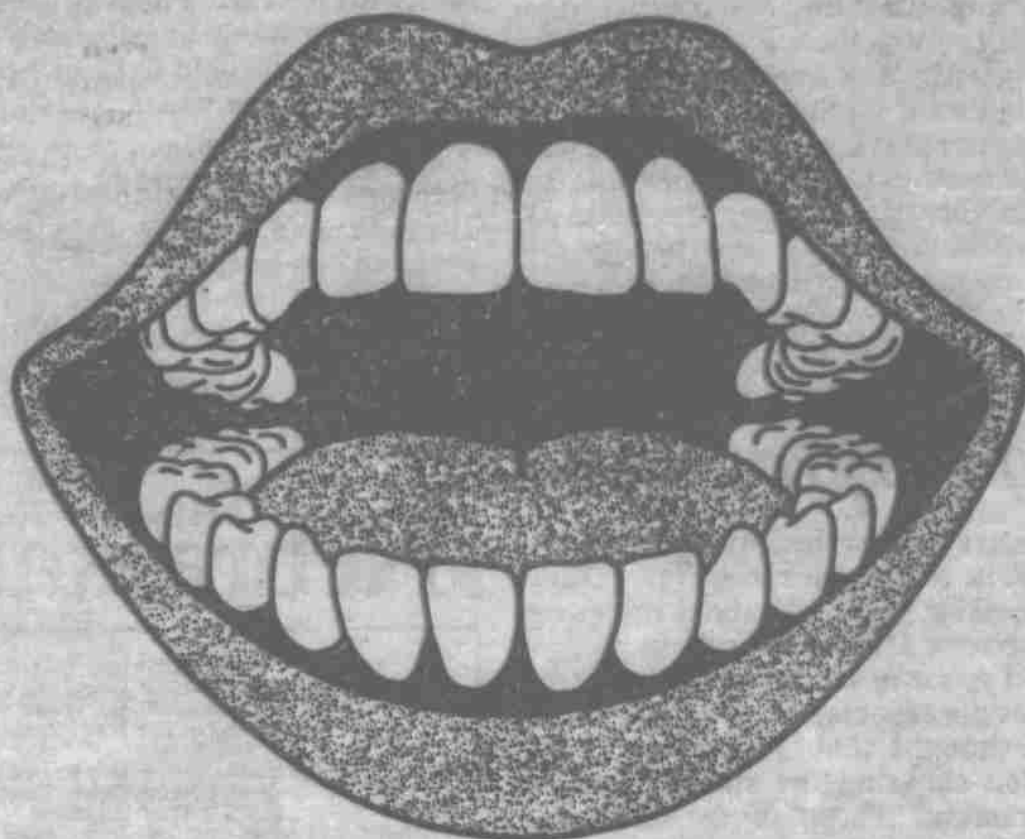

Tarik Al-Ganan, a senior civil engineering major from Saudi Arabia, said American students and foreign students can benefit from campus activities like the dance.

"We all appreciate a chance to get to know each other on a more informal basis," he said.
