Baseball stars criticize drug abuse

By Jim Rasmussen

Two former major league baseball stars visited Lincoln high schools Thursday and spoke to students and faculty about the dangers of alcohol and drug abuse.

Lou Johnson, a former major league baseball player, spoke to students Thursday at Lincoln Southeast High School. Johnson, who played for the Los Angeles Dodgers, warned the students about the hazards of drug and alcohol abuse, which shortened his career.

"Sweet" Lou Johnson, who hit two home runs to help the Dodgers to a World Series title in 1965, spoke at Lincoln High School, Lincoln East High School, and Lincoln Southeast High School.

About 700 people jammed the Southeast auditorium to hear the two men speak.

Johnson said that by the time he reached the major leagues in 1965, he was consuming about a fifth of whiskey a day, and started using marijuana.

"I eventually ended up with cocaine, and I was doing about a half-ounce of coke a day," he said. "By 1969, I was out of baseball because of my problem."

Johnson said he has been without alcohol and drugs for three years.

"I'm proud of Lou Johnson," he said. "Young people, if you have had a beer in your life, keep it to the minimum," Johnson said. "Know your body, and what it can handle."

Duren said he thinks students need to be better educated about the use of alcohol and drugs.

"Alcohol is a drug," Duren said. "It's important to know that. We need to get smart about it. If you don't understand the drug, you're going to get hurt."

Johnson and Duren are in Lincoln to play in the "Celebrity Swing" golf classic, which is scheduled to begin at 9:30 a.m. Friday. The two men arrived a day early so they could speak to the students.

The aim of the "Celebrity Swing" is to increase awareness for the School Community Intervention Program, which started this fall in Lincoln. The program will use teachers and parents to help young people who may have problems with drugs or alcohol.

Several of the celebrities who will play in Friday's golf classic were introduced at a press conference Thursday evening at the Lincoln Hilton. Besides Johnson and Duren, those attending were: Lincoln native David Doyle, who played Bosley on "Charlie's Angels"; Grant Goodeve, an actor on "Dynasty" and "Eight is Enough"; Gordon MacRae, film star and Lincoln resident; Harold Stone and John Larch, two character actors who have appeared on many television shows; Claude Retherford, former NU basketball star, and nationally known organist Lenny Dee. Bob Devaney is also scheduled to play, as are several other celebrities.

Expo aids small businesses

Small Business Expo '83 gave government agencies and private industry opportunities to advise small business owners and potential owners.

The second annual expo took place Thursday at Southeast Community College. The day-long event featured booths with sponsors ranging from the Ming Palace restaurant to Public Works and Utilities, guest speakers and mini-seminars where aspects of business management were disclosed.

"The expo basically has two objectives," said Robert Glenn, coordinator of Adult Business Occupations. "We want to help those people who think they would like to get into business for themselves."

"Our second objective is to help those who are already in business and have a problem," Glenn said. "Here they can get expert advice from people who have already been there and have succeeded."

"Times aren't easy, some people I've talked to are unemployed and they see opening a small business as the answer to their problem," said Ilene Reed, president of Reed Promotional Consultants.

The City Economic Development Division and Commission, Lincoln Chamber of Commerce, Private Industry Council, Southeast Community College, University of Nebraska-Lincoln Small Business Center and Service Association of Nebraska co-sponsored the expo.
