

Unemployment

Moloney said most of the working women in the state work in servicerelated fields. These include jobs in education, hotel work, social work and secretarial jobs.

The good news is what's where the majority of the jobs are," Moloney said. The bad news is that this is also a low-paying area."

Boesch said unemployment statistics, especially those dealing with women and minorities, can tend to be misleading.

Many people who are able to find work now are "not desperate" for a job, she said. Employers are now seeking workers with a great deal of expe-rience and technical skills. Most of the women looking for work don't qualify in those areas, she said.

Many women are having difficulty finding work because they have had only volunteer jobs, which are discounted by most employers, she said. Other women are at a disadvan-tage when trying to re-enter the work force after an absence of several years, Boesch said.

Minority women are hit especially hard because they face the double pressure of being women and members of minority groups, she said. Federal budget cuts to human service projects have dealt severe blows to women and minority groups also.

Rudolf Peralez, executive director of the state Mexican-American Commission, said many Hispanic people seek work outside the state because they either cannot find work here or they can get better-paying jobs elsewhere.

Bilingual Hispanics, who are badly needed in professional jobs, are not getting the salaries or the recognition they deserve, Peralez said.

Peralez said the recession has pushed the Hispanic community into the electoral process." Hispanics are now realizing they do have a voice in the government and can use their votes to make elected officials listen to them, he said.

The Midwest Voter Registration Education Program, whose representatives will meet with the Mexican-American Commission in October, plans to inform Lincoln's Hispanic community of its services and encourage voting, Peralez said.

Sound systems let riders know when bus is late

Beginning Monday, downtown commuters will know exactly when to expect their buses, thanks to a unique electronic schedule update system installed in downtown bus stops.

Solar-powered sound systems have been installed in bus stops at 14th and M, 14th and O and 13th and Joe Gray, Lincoln Transportation System operations specialist, said the system will allow LTS dispatchers to forewarn commuters when their bus is off schedule. He said the system is the only one of its kind anywhere.

Motorola C & E Inc. developed the solar-powered receivers for LTS, Gray said. Each unit cost $1,000, most of which was paid through a grant from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration. LTS paid 20 percent of the costs.

Yearbooks sell Nov. 1

"UNL Greek System: Outstanding in Our Field," is the theme for the 1963-84 Greek yearbook and, according to editor Julie Russel, some changes have been made to portray the caliber of Greek achievements through various campus

Changes which have been made include selecting a smaller staff, which will "hopefully be more functional," Russel said.

There's not a lot of versatility within the book, so there aren't a lot of changes we can make in the layout idea," she

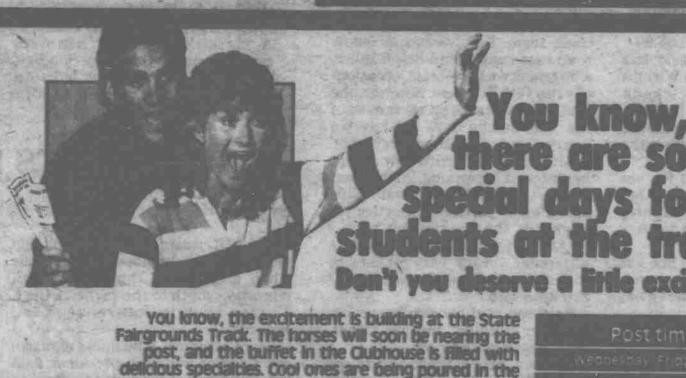

However, she said, the 16 pages of color at the beginning of the book will include events such as Greek Week and Homecoming, which were not done in color last year.

"This year we've going to capitalize on the journalistic aspects. We want to make the book a professional product," said Russel, a senior advertising major.

Consistency, better pictures and variety are three elements that Ted Kaol, advertising major and photo editor, said he hopes to include in the yearbook this year.

"We want to try to get better contrast throughout the book," Knof said.

Yearbooks will go on sale during the first two weeks of November in the Punhelienic office. The books will sell for $11
