'Smash Palace'...

When his wife won't speak to him except through a closed door, he yanks it off with his truck. And in the film's most irrevocable action, Al kidnaps Georgia — and the camera follows his frenzied escape.

There is a relaxation in the terror-filled situation for everyone, when Al makes a birthday party for his little girl.

"They won't let me see you again; at least this way we'll have a few weeks together," he tells her.

A fever that Georgie can't shake cuts their hiding short, and Al returns to Smash Palace for a final siege.

The film gives a very effective portrayal of his destruction and destructiveness; despite his wife's final offer of help and forgiveness, we know it's too late for that — Al is too far gone.

'Lavender Moonlight'...

She knew from the start that he was different from the rest. None of her friends could talk about growing up in exile in Argentina. She had been so pleased with herself the first time she duped him into taking her out; he was so shy with her that all he could do was stammer that her skin reminded him of dry Cream of Wheat. She had been terribly moved by this faltering compliment, and that night took the next logical step and assumed that someday they would get married.

Walker Treadmill emerged from the hotel with a room key in his hand. "You'll be safe here; I have been instructed to take some precautions," he said, handing April the key.

"When can I see Randall again?" April asked in a voice that sounded too much like a whine.

"He should be here soon, I've no doubt," Walker said reassuringly.

April thought for a minute. "Could you tell me why, when we decided to come to South Africa, Randall kept talking about cows?"

Walker stared at her. "How do you know about that?" he whispered.

"I'm from Nebraska. Everybody knows about cows in Nebraska," she said, taken aback by Walker's reaction.

"Not cows, C.O.W.S.," Walker whispered again. "the Congress On White Supremacy. Your Mr. Hitler must be in on that, and that's why you've been marked for death!"

"I don't remember seeing anything about that in any of the brochures," April said.

"It's not the kind of thing you advertise," Walker said. "Come on, we'd better get you inside."

Next week: The C.O.W.S. jump over the moon.

Has Purchasing Jewelry Got You Puzzled?

ALL DIAMONDS ARE NOT CREATED EQUAL

Many so-called "sale diamonds" are merely diamonds of much lower quality.

When shopping, ask to see the diamond under magnification in a ten power binocular microscope, such as Sartor Hamann's Diamondscope.

COMPARISON WILL SHOW YOU WHY THE STATE'S BEST VALUES IN FINE DIAMONDS HAVE COME FROM SARTOR HAMANN FOR ALMOST 80 YEARS.
