

Houserockers . . .

If the Houserockers had a video, it would feature a leggy blonde in black leather gear, strutting across the cement parking lot on the album cover.

She would pick up the jack-hammer and begin destroying the lot in time with the heavy guitar and the 1-2 drum bass combination. The camera would cut away to the group, then to rockets taking off, then to soccer players scoring goals, then to the State Capitol and then a snake.

The camera would pan in fast from behind the girl; she casts a contemptuous glance at vocalist Joe Grushecky and he seductively returns it. She drops the hammer and walks off into the industrial sunset, leaving ugly Grushecky with his band, cracked under the pressure.
