

Documentary's indictments potent

By Chuck Jagoda

"America: From Hitler to the MX" is a new anti-war feature documentary created and directed by Joan Harvey, who also directed "We are the Guinea Pigs." Both films inhabit the part of the anti-war documentary genre that speaks about specifically nuclear warfare policy. The film is powerful and unashamedly propagandistic. No Patrick Buchanans, William F. Buckley or James Kilpatrick's answer criticisms of U.S. government policy and industrial support of Hitler's Germany.

Film Review

Indictments Voiced
Harvey draws from a broad range of witnesses to voice her indictments. Labor leaders, contemporary nuclear workers, congressmen, doctors, defense analysts, scientists, families of dead nuclear workers, consultants, chief U.S. SALT II negotiator Paul Warnke, an 84-year-old civil rights worker and a mortician contribute their firsthand observations of an issue complicated by the introduction of nuclear energy onto the field of battle.

To present her version of U.S. nuclear-military history, Harvey intercuts testimonies from more than 40 people with newsreel footage of U.S. and Germany armies, clippings from The New York Times and measurements of radioactivity in rivers and in abandoned uranium mines.

Powerful sub-themes
The central thesis of the film is that corporate interests know no boundaries. But many sub-themes show up along the way: that the "Red baiting" of McCarthyism removed all progressive leaders from unions; that Presidential Directive 69 established the waging of limited nuclear war as official U.S. policy, that American corporations like Pratt & Whitney, who built engines for both the U.S. and German air forces during World War II, currently are owned by the same people who owned them then; and that the U.S. Army provided free testing for nuclear weapons developed by DuPont and exposed American servicemen to long-term exposure to nuclear contamination to study its effects on humans.

The film is sponsored by Nebraskans For Peace and plays Tuesday at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. at Sheldon Film Theatre. Admission is $3.

Concert set for Nov. 12

Bill Buntain, chairman of the University Program Council's Major Concerts Committee has announced that Lionel Ritchie and the Pointer Sisters will be in concert Nov. 12 at the Bob Devaney Sports Center.

Ritchie is known for his work as a member of the Commodores, as a solo artist and as a record producer. The Pointer Sisters started with a unique be-bop sound. In recent years, they have moved toward more mainstream pop sound.

Tickets are $11.50 and $13.50. They will be available at Pickle's Records, Brandeis and the Nebraska and East unions. Tickets go on sale Wednesday.
