

Letters

Assume privilege

Two letters (Daily Nebraskan, Oct. 10) require comment. They share the unthinkable assumption of white male privilege, and on it base their rebuttal of recent social criticism.

Phillip Holtzen should see that recognizing differences among people is not why James Watt is wrong. His joke about the differences shows clearly a mentality that would prefer not to make room for Americans who are not able-bodied white males.

Similarly, Nels Forde takes for granted the protected status of white males (homosexuals not being "male") that he refuses to see that other citizens must be specifically protected. The kinds of differences which we have begun to protect by law and by policy do not in themselves prevent functioning of a working team; the traditional prejudices of participants do. Forde is arguing for the legitimacy of these prejudices and against the attempts to change them.

Fan impressed

I am an Oklahoma State fan and employee. I went to the OSU-Nebraska game Oct. 8 and was very impressed with the Nebraska fans. They are swell and loyal people. Never once did I hear a rude remark from an NU fan.

Also, I would like to compliment the NU coaching staff. They are doing a good job and have an excellent team. They deserve to be No. 1.

I took my 12-year-old son, Gary, to the game with me. Before the game, after the team practiced, one of the coaches gave my son a Nebraska football. I would like to thank him very much for this. I have never seen a happier 12-year-old. He is very proud of having a football from the No. 1 team in the nation.

Gary plays 6th grade football and his team is 5-0 and has had only six points scored against it. He took his NU football to practice yesterday and everybody wanted to play with a No. 1 football.

I will be cheering for the Cornhuskers when they play Oklahoma.
