Team short on height, long on experience

By Scott Ahlstrand

Nebraska's women's basketball team started the 1983-84 season Monday with their first practice, and followed it up with a press and photo day Tuesday.

Interim head coach Kelly Hill said while she expects to improve on last year's 14-14 mark, Nebraska will again face a height problem.

"We're not going to be really tall," Hill said. "We will have a lot of quickness in the backcourt. Not too many teams are going to be able to match up with us man to man."

This year's squad returns four starters and seven returning lettermen. Kelli Benson, the only senior on the team, and juniors Debra Powell, Terri Parriott and Cathy Owen have started for two years. Other returning players include Crystal Coleman, Rhonda Pieper and Jacquie Shackelford.

Powell, the leading scorer and rebounder on last year's team, and Coleman, the second leading scorer, were high school teammates and are key players, Hill said.

"Deb Powell is one of our best athletes. She's an integral part of our transition play and our defense," Hill said.

Hill said Coleman, Nebraska's sixth player the last two years, could start for the Huskers this year.

Of the Huskers' four recruits, Hill said Angie Miller of Clatonia and Stacy Imming of Kearney should have the best chance of contributing right away. Freshmen Heidi Keyes, Shelly Block and walk-on Ann Costello should also see action, Hill said.

The 6-3 Keyes is projected as a starter by Hill for later in the season.

The women's team will play 14 doubleheader games with Nebraska's men's team. Hill said the trend towards doubleheaders should allow more people to see the women's team play.
