The residents offered several alternatives to the proposed acquisition, including a proposal to put Dodge Street underground and building a parking lot on top, and to stagger classes at UNO to ease the parking crunch.

The board also approved the hiring of a Lincoln architectural firm — Bahn, Vermeer and Haecker — to do the design work on remodeling projects at Architecture Hall and the Former Law building on the UNL campus.

Regent Robert G. Simmons of Scottsbluff objected to the hiring, saying the fee of 6.2 percent of the total project cost was too high, and that the architects had been chosen in a different manner than architects for other projects. Bahr, Vermeer and Haecker won a 1978 design contest sponsored by the regents, and was given the contract. Simmons urged renegotiation of the contract, but was voted down, 7-1.
