Senator supported

I found the editorial concerning "Sensationalistic barkers undeserving of attention" (Daily Nebraskan, Nov. 11) very interesting but I was quite dismayed when Larry Flynt's publicity attempts were compared to Sen. Ernie Chambers' attempts to gain publicity. Unlike the author of the editorial, I do not find Sen. Chambers to be "a common parasite living and feeding from issues and emotions." To the contrary, I have found the man to be extremely concerned about numerous important issues, especially international topics of discussion. I would recommend that you use wiser judgment when choosing people for a comparison.

Searches unfair

The library policy relegating the inspection of private lockers and study rooms should be rewritten to have the practice of scheduled, not random, searches for unborrowed library materials.

I think UNL students appreciate the policy's objective of having an adequate velocity of borrowed books, and few books not being rat-holed. But this policy, as enforced, allows for unscheduled searches of all lockers and private study rooms, during the renter's absence and without the students' immediate knowledge.

This kind of surprise, although consistent with the signed agreement, does violate one's sense of being secure in property. Having one's personal property arbitrarily scrutinized, however benign, exceeds the grounds of fairness.

And of course, one or three innocent searches may become nasty when property is misplaced by the students or stolen by someone other than a library official. Fortunately, this has not happened yet.
