Snowed-in vehicles face towing sweep

Beginning Sunday, the Lincoln Police Department will comb the city's streets for parked vehicles that have not moved since last Sunday's snowstorm.

Once such cars are located, they will be towed and impounded, according to information released Thursday by LPD.

Chief Dan Leitner said every street and arterial will be patrolled to identify abandoned, stolen and other vehicles that hampered snow removal efforts.

The vehicles will be impounded under a parking ordinance that prohibits them from being parked on a city street for more than 24 hours without being moved, Leitner said.

Officers will be able to identify vehicles in violation of the ordinances because of the heavy snowfall and subsequent evidence of traffic and plows having to work around the automobiles, he said.

LPD last conducted such a project three or four years ago, Leitner said. In that search-and-tow mission, several hundred cars were impounded, and most were never claimed, he said.

Leitner said citizens have had ample time to dig their vehicles out and warned those whose cars have not been moved to move them soon.
