

Schnellenberger . . .

For Schnellenberger, being an assistant on that undefeated Super Bowl championship team was not nearly as thrilling as leading his Hurricanes to the Orange Bowl with a national championship on the line.

"Going 17-0 was really exciting, but I was only part of the whole picture," he said.

After the first stint with the Dolphins, Schnellenberger got his first head coaching job with Baltimore in 1973. He didn't prove too successful in his time with the Colts, and he puts the blame on his lack of control.

Pro football organizations are sometimes too reliant on the abilities of the front offices, Schnellenberger said, and that takes too much responsibility from the coaches.

So Schnellenberger went back to Miami and his friend, Don Shula. But Schnellenberger wasn't satisfied with returning to an assistantship. When Lou Saban stepped down as head coach of the Hurricanes, Schnellenberger was the school's first choice to replace him.

Schnellenberger didn't meet with immediate success at Miami, but his first team did post a victory at Penn State on its way to a 5-6 season.

Schnellenberger took the Hurricanes to the Peach Bowl in 1980 when they finished 9-3. The team was saddled with an NCAA probation the next year, and despite finishing with nine wins in 11 games, couldn't go bowling.

Huskers headline banquet

Mike Rozier will head a list of Cornhusker athletes who will speak and present awards at the first annual academic-athletic achievement banquet at Omaha's Red Lion Inn Dec. 20.

The 6:30 p.m. banquet will honor 17 Omaha-area students for their academic and athletic achievements, according to Ray Oliver, program director of the North Branch YMCA in Omaha.

Oliver was a three-year letterman for the Nebraska wrestling team.

In addition to Rozier, Irving Fryar, Mike Knox, Turner Gill and volleyball player Sallye Ramsey will speak at the affair, Oliver said.

Reservations can be made through the North Branch YMCA, 341-9134. All proceeds will go toward the YMCA Enhance program for area youth.

Oliver said each person attending the banquet is asked to bring an orange, which will be redistributed to low-income families in the Omaha area.

New men's volleyball club seeks success, financing

By Jeff Korbelik

Volleyball is no longer just a sport for women at UNL.

The only contact men have had with volleyball has been through intramural play and watching the women compete. But that has changed with the organization of the new men's volleyball club.

"I jumped in the water by myself," player-coach Barry Janzen said. "I knew people who wanted to play."

Janzen, the women's assistant coach, said 32 people have signed up to play, which allowed him to form three teams for city recreation competition. Two of the teams will be sanctioned by the United States Volleyball Association.

Other than city-rec, Nebraska will be trying to schedule games with clubs from the University of Kansas and Brigham Young University. Janzen said he is looking to play schools with NCAA and NAIA programs.

He said in one or two years there might be a possibility of playing such teams as Graceland University of Lamona, Iowa; Ohio State and Ball State. Within four or five years, Janzen hopes he can bring in teams from the West Coast.

"We would have to catch them heading somewhere else but there is a possibility," he said.

Players include two members from Acacia Fraternity, the Fraternity A championship team, two from Alpha Tau Omega, two from Lambda Chi Alpha, and others from various independent teams. Former Husker basketball player Greg Downing and former Nebraska punter Grant Campbell are also members of the team.

"We have a team of some quality, and most of the guys have played some type of structured volleyball," Janzen said. "We need to find people who jump well, and are interested in the sport. We haven't had any difficulty getting started or getting the players trained."

"I love to play volleyball, and I want to play more than house intramural volleyball," treasurer Jeff Iverson said.

Iverson is in charge of collecting $15 from each individual to cover the city-rec fees.

The club has asked for money from the Campus Activities & Programs office, and next year Iverson said they will request money from the university recreation department. The money from the CAP office will be used to cover tournament entry fees, Iverson said.

"It would be great if we got the money, but it doesn't bother me too much," Iverson said, referring to paying to play.

Janzen said he hopes to create the interest in men's volleyball that can be seen at Brigham Young, where approximately 8,000 people will attend a match. The future of the men's volleyball club depends on a couple of things, Janzen said.

"We need to create an interest in the sport; it can go a long ways," Janzen said. "It involves practice time and the recruiting of good athletes. We need volleyball players to come here and play."
