Students reveal final's week plans

By Jann Nyffeler

Sex. Drugs. Rock and roll. Men/women. There are some things in life that some of us think we can't do without. But this time of year, a nasty six-letter word gets added to the list of things we would like to do without but can't: finals.

There are ways to get around the ecstasy of finals, but most UNL students cop out and study.

"Some of the guys on my floor are getting drunk until next Tuesday," said J. Scott Gilbert, an ag honors sophomore. "But I'm just gonna treat it like another exam. The only difference is that it's comprehensive."

Senior Kyle Kammerer said he anticipates "the usual: buy some beer, . . . lots of late studying."

"Finals are nothing special, just another pain in the neck," Kammerer said.

Some students, like Rich Moser, take finals more seriously. Moser, a senior majoring in finance, said he has been spreading out his work fairly evenly throughout the course of the semester. He simply anticipates studying the night before his finals.

When asked how he planned to prepare for finals, junior Andy Carothers joked, "I'm not." Carothers continued to spout idle threats, saying, "I'm going to get all my reading done and study ahead so I don't have to cram for finals."

Junior English major Julie Hermann, who said she has one final and three papers, said she also plans on "getting things done early, locking myself away and handing everything in untyped."

With four finals, Gerald Mhembers admitted he's studying more than normal the last two weeks of the semester. The ag engineering freshman realizes that preparing for finals will "take most of my time."

Another freshman with four finals, James Newell, said he plans on "just studying" in his pursuit of an acceptable GPA. "I'll be up quite awhile this weekend."

Business major Shane Isaacson said, "I'm doing a lot of praying, trying to open the books. I'm going to get by myself. Read, study, pray and hope."

As for myself, well, I gave up finals for Lent once and forgot to take them up again. Thanks to a generous professor who doesn't believe in giving finals during finals week, maybe I'll go to Colorado next week.
