"Thoughtware businesses are choosing to be near the source of brains, near a good educational system," Birch said. "I think we have to find ways to make sure that every citizen can afford access to a quality education. I don't think that's a question of ideology — it's a question of survival in a world economy."

Gov. Bob Kerrey, in retracing his own history as a young Nebraska businessman, pointed out the importance of strong community belief in pursuing economic opportunities.

"We've got to have individuals who believe in the state," he said. "But a belief in the community is hard to create in government. It's got to come from the ground up."

Lebanon's prime minister and cabinet resign

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Lebanon headed deeper into crisis Sunday when the prime minister resigned, some army soldiers were reported to have abandoned their posts, and battles raged for a fourth day between the army and Moslem militias.

More than 70 people have been reported killed and hundreds wounded in the last four days. The Moslem prime minister, Shafiq al-Wazzan, had asked to resign several times before, urging the Christian president, Amin Gemayel, to form a new government bringing together all of Lebanon's warring groups. Gemayel finally accepted the resignation Sunday morning, suggesting he now agreed that a new approach was needed because recent U.S.-backed diplomacy had failed to stop the country's slide into chaos.

Wazzan's departure automatically means the resignation of the whole 10-man cabinet. The Presidential Palace said Gemayel would start talks on a new cabinet immediately, with Wazzan staying on as caretaker prime minister.

In Washington, Vice President George Bush said the resignation of the Lebanese cabinet is not necessarily a major setback for reconciliation prospects and will not lessen U.S. resolve to achieve its aims in Lebanon. "I like to feel that (the resignation) has not set back the prospects . . . We have no reason to be overly pessimistic," Bush said on NBC television's "Meet the Press" program.

Shuttle's 'target' balloon explodes

KENNEDY SPACE CENTER — Another bubble burst for NASA Sunday when a "target" balloon designed to simulate a satellite blew up in space after being released from the orbiting space shuttle Challenger. Following the loss of a $30-million communications satellite shortly after launch Friday, Sunday's destruction of the balloon was the second major setback for Challenger's eight-day flight, the 10th space shuttle mission.

The balloon was to have been used as a target to test new radar equipment which will be employed on future shuttle missions to find and retrieve orbiting satellites. "It deployed normally (from Challenger's hold), started to inflate and then burst," flight director Randy Stone told reporters.

Military fund abuse alleged

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — The Reagan administration may be diverting funds from joint U.S.-Honduran war games to build permanent military bases in Honduras without approval from Congress, a U.S. senator said Sunday. The senator, Tennessee Democrat Jim Sasser, came here on Friday to investigate a report about the alleged construction from his staff. "It appears," he told a press conference, "that military commanders in Honduras are proceeding with a very substantial buildup of military facilities, in some cases, without congressional approval." Sasser, an opponent of President Reagan's Central America policies, is the senior Democrat on the Senate Appropriations Committee's Military Construction Subcommittee. He said the outcome of his probe could determine whether Congress approved funds for more exercises in Honduras this summer.

Glenn gains on Mondale in poll

BOSTON — Former Vice President Walter Mondale has dropped nine percentage points among people likely to vote in New Hampshire's Democratic primary, while Ohio Sen. John Glenn slightly improved his second-place ranking, the Boston Globe said Sunday. The daily, which surveyed 483 Democratic and independent voters, said Jesse Jackson rose to within three points of Glenn. The poll was conducted by telephone January 29-31. A Dec. 10 Globe poll gave Mondale 46 percent, Glenn, 16 percent and Jackson, six percent. The new survey found second place tightening, with Colorado Sen. Gary Hart moving up four points.

Taken four weeks before the Feb. 28 New Hampshire primary, the poll also showed that attacks by Glenn and other Democrats have hurt Mondale, the Globe said. Here is how the Globe poll went: Reubin Askew 1 percent; Alan Cranston 2; Glenn 18, Hart 12; Ernest Hollings 2; Jackson 16 George McGovern 4; Mondale 37; undecided 8.
