As many as 1,000 dead in religious violence

LAGOS, Nigeria - As many as 1,000 people died in a week of religious violence in the northeast Nigerian city of Yola and fighting is still raging, the government-owned New Nigerian newspaper said Sunday. Hospital sources said the death toll was 250. A government official said Wednesday that 137 people had died in the disturbances, which began Monday. The newspaper said about 500 bodies had been removed from the Yola hospital for mass burial. The News Agency of Nigeria said 100 bodies had been buried in a mass grave Tuesday.

Troops moved in Friday to quell violence by Muslim fundamentalists who had regrouped and were using "sophisticated weapons" to beat back police, a police spokesman said. The violence, the country's third outbreak in just over three years, was started by followers of Moslem fundamentalist leader Muhammadu Marwa Maitatsine, police said. Maitatsine was killed in rioting in the northern city of Kano three years ago. An official report said more than 4,000 people died in these riots, which were suppressed by the army.

Without draft, forces need women

WASHINGTON - The armed forces will need to recruit more women in the next decade unless there is a return to the draft, the chairman of the House armed services subcommittee on military personnel said Sunday. Rep. Les Aspin, a Wisconsin Democrat, said the reduction in the birth rate and the improved economy meant fewer men would be eligible for or choose to join the military. The military needs to recruit 37 percent of all eligible males to meet the administration's plan for an increase in armed forces enlisted personnel of 160,000 over five years, he said. He said the Air Force had the worst record on hiring women. "About 23 percent of the jobs open to women in the Navy are occupied by women. In the Army, it's 22 percent, and in the Air Force only 12 percent," Aspin said in a statement. Altogether there are more than 200,000 women in the armed forces - about 10 percent of the active force - up from 45,000 in 1972, he said.

Congressmen: Send food to Africa

WASHINGTON - A bipartisan group of 96 congressmen Thursday urged President Reagan to take emergency action to send food to 24 needy African countries. Rep. Byron Dorgan, who organized the group, said the United States must move quickly to prevent a repetition of the 1973 African famine.

"We can't sit by and let millions of people die from hunger when our own food bins are overflowing - many nations can send guns and other weapons to these poor countries, but few can match the surplus food aid of the United States," Dorgan, a North Dakota Democrat, said. In a letter to Reagan, the group urged the president to rush food shipments already approved for distribution, use 300,000 tons of grain in the emergency wheat reserve, work with Congress to approve additional food aid, and draw on the $50 million in borrowing authority for the Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance.

Chernenko focus of elections

MOSCOW - Soviet voters Thursday endorsed officially chosen candidates to the Supreme Soviet (parliament) in an election marked by an emerging campaign to project the personality of Communist Party Chief Konstantin Chernenko. Nearly 100 percent of the country's 160 million-strong electorate were expected to cast their votes for 1,500 candidates to the two-chamber house, which meets for short sessions twice a year to approve laws.

Although all power remains in the hands of the Communist Party leadership, the elections are treated as a major national event, with thousands of party activists mobilized to ensure a big turnout. As voters trooped to red-draped polling stations scattered across the country from the Pacific coast to the Baltic republics, the state media focused its coverage on one man - the 72-year-old new party leader. Western diplomats have been struck by the scale of official praise devoted to Chernenko as well as by the uncertain style of his public performances.
