

Roo Party...

"I'd like to make a bubble that doesn't pop, so you could sit in a room and blow soap bubbles and the room would just fill up," Hazuka said. "I'd also like to design a squirt gun that blows bubbles."

Hazuka is a graduate of Central High School in Omaha, where he was active in sports and had a job at J B Big Boy's.

If people visit him, he said, they probably would find him listening to some type of new music, such as Joy Division, X or the Clash. He said his good taste in music was one of the qualifications he listed as making him the best candidate.

Another distinguishing feature, Hazuka said, is that he is not in a fraternity. If elected ASUN president, the organization would be different, he said.

Hazuka said that as one ASUN change, he would like to keep all fraternity people from wearing topsiders and pink ties.

Hazuka's only regret was not getting into the paper sooner.

"Some people thought we were just copying Don Ho, but we had the idea before they announced," he said.

"It's really us against the Don Ho Party, because we're the only two serious parties in the race," Hazuka said.

Fashin runs as alternative

By Milli King

Although the Fashin Party began its ASUN race only three days before the filing deadline, the campaign went well, according to presidential candidate Tim Burke.

"We were very honest and fair in our campaign," he said.

FASHIN

If he could do it again, Burke said, he'd have found more senators to run with the party and arranged for more debates to prove he is the best ASUN presidential candidate.

Burke said he picked senatorial candidates who are similar to himself. The senate needs people with energy, charisma and new ideas, he said. Other presidential candidates want to use ASUN as a resume builder, he said; they represent the same views on the same issues.

Once Fashin takes office, Burke said, ASUN will start doing more by working to increase lobbying and promote student involvement.

"I want to make ASUN a respectable organization," he said.

Burke said he had some difficulty getting the 200 signatures needed to run in such a short time period. He said the party had difficulty establishing itself as a serious party and getting members together to work.

Burke said the Fashin Party represents a varied group of people.

"I'm very proud of everyone," he said.

Burke, a sophomore advertising major, is the son of Tom and Sally Burke. He attended Lincoln Southeast High School and was involved in the Spanish Club, DECA and the tennis team and was a talent show winner as a senior.

Burke, a current member and former rush chairman of Phi Delta Theta. He is also a member of College Republicans and UNL's Advertising Club. He was the 1983 winner of the Greek talent show with his juggling act.

Burke said he hopes to develop better leadership skills in dealing with large numbers of people if elected.

"I hope students realize we're an alternative to the other parties. We want to make ASUN something we can all be proud of," he said.

Outgoing ASUN President Matt Wallace blows away the last few days in his Nebraska Union office. Wallace, an accomplished saxophonist, often lends his horn to the Lincoln Jazz Society and the Neoclassic Jazz Orchestra.

Matt Wallace reviews term and advises perseverance

By Milli King

Serving as president of ASUN was a good experience for Matt Wallace, but, he said, it's time to move on to other things.

Wallace said he encountered few obstacles during his presidency, but said, "The time commitment can be overwhelming."

Politically speaking, it was an eye-opening experience working with the Board of Regents, who were very responsive to student concerns, said Wallace.

The two major issues tackled during the past year were developing student legal services and reducing the amount of litter on campus.

Although the student litigation project hasn't been enacted, Wallace said he's very optimistic about its implementation. The program would give attorneys the power to represent students in court.

With the help of Wallace, a student legal services handbook was produced in an effort to increase communication with students.

Wallace said UNL was the second college targeted by Keep America Beautiful to enact this particular pilot program of reducing litter on campus.

Press conferences and television commercials were used to promote the program, which concentrated on football game Saturdays.

"WHAT DO YOU THINK ABOUT THE upc AUSTRALIAN FILM FESTIVAL ON MARCH 16th and 17th?"

Diane Adcock
Sophomore, Arts & Science College
"I've heard so much about these films. I can't wait to go see them, and I think that everyone on this campus should go see them."

Bill Sherman,
Graduate Student, Undeclared
"Yeah, I heard something about Australia's beautiful scenery, so I think I'll go see them."
